Elliott and Fry. The view of Worcester Cathedral is reproduced by kind permission of Messrs. Valentine and Sons, Limited, and that of Trottiscliffe Church by kind permission of the Rev. Charles W. ALBERTO RANDEGGER.

In the southernmost corner of the Grand Duchy of Baden, almost touching the Swiss frontier, lies the village of Randegg. Thereby hangs a name—the name of Randegger. The late Professor John Stuart Blackie on one occasion, when he sat next to Mr. Randegger at a dinner party, propounded some elaborate theories on the etymology of the name, greatly to the amusement of him who bore it, and who, in deference to the old Professor, would not question Blackie's erudition. The origin of the patronymic, however, is as simple as it is geographical. A young villager of Randegg left his native heath to make his way in the world. He settled at Trieste and, following an ancient custom, assumed the name of his birthplace, which thenceforth became the family name.

Alberto Randegger was born at Trieste, April 13, 1832. His father was a master at a public school at Trieste, and his mother, of Tuscan parentage, was an amateur musician. As a child Alberto showed no signs of musical capacity. Curiously enough, music came to him with lightning flash. There was in the house an old spinet with black naturals and white sharps. One day, when he was thirteen years of age, he went up to the spinet and, without the slightest knowledge of music, he played a tune! "Not with one finger, mind you," says Mr. Randegger, "but with both hands, straight off, with correct harmonies, and without any previous evidence whatever of any music in me."

Such a remarkable and unpremeditated exhibition of latent talent caused some astonishment in the Randegger family. Upon the urgent solicitation of the family friends, Master Alberto was in due course primarily placed under A. Tivoli and, later on, under Jean Lafont for instruction in pianoforte playing. Signor Tivoli was at that time director of an excellent orchestral society, while Jean Lafont was organist of the English church at Trieste, although he did not understand the English language. Thus young Randegger had many opportunities of picking up musical knowledge and he availed himself of them with ceaseless activity.

A TIME-SIGNATURE!

He afterwards became a pupil of Luigi Ricci for composition. At that time Ricci, who was a prolific composer of Italian operas, held the posts of Kapellmeister of Trieste Cathedral and of Maestro Concertatore at the opera. In this pupilage stage Randegger, by attending all the opera rehearsals at the theatre with his master, gained much practical experience in operatic matters, which proved to be of the greatest value to him in after years. Ricci was a bit of a wag in his way. Once at a rehearsal he asked his pupil, pointing to a time-signature, "What time is that?" Randegger, after looking at it, replied "triple time." "No, it's lost time," said Ricci, thus giving timely expression to his opinion upon the worthlessness of the music.

The year 1850 was an eventful one in the career of Alberto Randegger. He then, at the age of eighteen, made the acquaintance of Verdi, who came to Trieste for the production of his opera "Stiffelio" (afterwards re-written and re-named "Aroldo"), which was first performed November 16, 1850. Young Randegger, who sat near the piano, turning over the pages of the score from which Verdi was playing at the initial rehearsals, was requested by Verdi to teach the prima donna her part. By the time he was nineteen he had composed several masses and other pieces for the church, in addition to two ballets—"La Fidanzata di Castellamare" and "La Sposa d'Appenzello," both produced at the Teatro Grande of his native city. He also collaborated with four other pupils of Ricci in the composition of an opera-bouffe in four acts, entitled "Il Lazzarone," which was performed, with great success, at the Teatro Mauroner, Trieste.

VERDI.

For two years—1852-54—Randegger was musical director of theatres at Fiume, Zara, Sinigaglia, Brescia, and Venice. At the last named city, in the early part of 1853, he again came across the path of Verdi. "Il Trovatore" had been produced at Rome on January 19, 1853, and its composer came to Venice to launch another popular opera, "La Traviata," which was first performed at the Fenice on March 6, 1853. Mr. Randegger states, from his personal knowledge, that Verdi scored nearly the whole of the first act in one night, standing at a desk and writing throughout the hours of the darkness on that night of his arrival from Rome. The Fenice Theatre was crowded at the first performance, but through Verdi's kindness Randegger was enabled to have a chair placed in the orchestra expressly for him. For various reasons, quite independent of the merits of the music, several pieces did not appeal to the fancy of the Venetians, who did not hesitate to express rather roughly their disapproval. Verdi, however, was by no means disheartened by the temporary failure of his opera. "I don't care a fig," he said; "time will judge." And he was right, for six months after the failure of "La Traviata" at the Fenice Theatre, it was again produced in Venice at the Teatro Rossini, when it obtained that success which has attended it ever since throughout the world.

In 1854 Randegger composed a four-act tragic opera, entitled "Bianca Capello," which was performed at Brescia and subsequently at Trieste. At this time there came to him the parting of the ways and, as a consequence, the great event in his life. An Italian manager, in conjunction with the late Max Strakosch, had engaged him to go to New York to conduct a season of Italian opera at the Academy of Music and to produce there his "Bianca Capello." He started on his journey thither, but, as the cholera broke out there, he was overtaken by a telegram from home forbidding him to cross the Atlantic. He stayed in Paris for a month. During his sojourn in the French capital his eldest brother, who had lived in England for many years and was a great admirer of the country, wrote saying, "I should like you to go and see London before you return home." He thereupon came to this cosmopolitan city, and here he has ever since remained.

INTRODUCTION TO ORATORIO.

Ricci subsequently sent his pupil a letter of introduction to Costa, who was at that time engrossed with the composition of his "Eli." "I can do nothing for you," said the great conductor, "but if you have talent, are industrious, and possess a little money, you might make your way here—if not, my best advice to you is to go back at once." He assured Costa that he did not want anything from him, but that he desired to hear as much music as possible. Costa thereupon showed much kindness to the young musician from Trieste, and they subsequently became firm friends. "Costa," recalls Mr. Randegger, "gave me a copy of 'The Messiah.' It was the first oratorio I ever possessed. He invited me to attend a performance of Handel's masterpiece that he was about to conduct at the Sacred Harmonic Society. I went. There was an enormous crowd in Exeter Hall, and, becoming overpowered by the magnitude of the orchestra and chorus, by the vast audience and the strangeness of the music to my ears, towards the end of the first part I fell fast asleep! 'How did you like "The Messiah"?' enquired Costa at our next meeting. When I told him of my somnolent state during the concert he laughed heartily, and said: 'You must be sure to attend the next performance of "The Messiah." I accordingly went again to Exeter Hall to hear Handel's great oratorio. I endured it a little longer than on the previous occasion, but in the long run I again went to sleep. Then I only knew Handel's name—oratorio was entirely unknown to me. I became very favourably impressed with London, and I said to myself: 'This is the place for me to stop—to watch, to study, and to learn.' Stop I did, and here I am. I have certainly watched, and I trust that I have learned something.

LEARNING ENGLISH.

"I had no knowledge whatever of English. For a year I lived at a boarding-house in London in order to acquire the language. I paid a guinea a week for my board and lodging. Beyond constitutional strolls along Oxford Street, I scarcely left the society of the old fogies of the boarding-house, with their cribbage, dominoes, and gossip. I used to write down phonetically various words that I overheard in the course of that boarding-house conversation. For instance: such a word as 'enough' I wrote 'inof'! and so on."

In 1855 Mr. Randegger published his first composition set to English words. It was a song, entitled "The Meadow Gate," and dedicated to R. Bond, Esq., 12th Lancers.

In a review of this English "Op. 1," J. W. Davison remarked (Musical World, January 12, 1856): "'The Meadow Gate' of Mr. Alberto Randegger, whoever that ominously-named gentleman may be (!), is clever and engaging, although not strikingly original. The accompaniment is well written; and the words of Mr. Swain are unaffected and pretty. But why select the key of D flat for such a trifle? Was it to prevent it from enjoying a wide circulation among the young ladies of the 'drawing-room' genus?"

Always "improving the shining hour," Mr. Randegger again took lessons in composition, this time with Bernhard Molique in London. In November, 1857, he made his first appearance in England as a conductor at a series of Opera Buffa performances given at the St. James's Theatre by an Italian company. "The orchestra, under the direction of Signor Randegger," recorded Mr. Davison, "went capitally, and the chorus was steady and efficient. On the whole, we consider that the new speculation has much claim to public attention, and is entitled to success."

OPERATIC ANECDOTES.

Two anecdotes of Mr. Randegger's operatic experiences may be told here. Once in Ireland, on the day following a performance of "Martha," Madame Rudersdorff, the prima donna of the company, received a letter from the Mayor of the town in which he protested against the office of a Sheriff being made fun of in the opera. Madame Rudersdorff in reply wrote to His Worship to the effect that the opera had been played in hundreds of cities and that no such remonstrance had ever been heard of before. Thereupon the Mayor, wearing his chain of office, called upon Rudersdorff to say that neither he nor anyone in authority had written the letter. In fact, it turned out to be a hoax, as the protest was sent as a practical joke by Charles Durand, one of the company. On another occasion, in Jersey, a well known and excellent oratorio singer, since departed this life, made his first appearance in opera, when he played the part of Duke Alfonso in "Lucrezia Borgia." There had been no dress rehearsal, and when Rudersdorff came upon the scene dressed in her magnificent attire, the poor basso was so completely flabbergasted that not only did he become "struck dumb with astonishment," but he became "rooted to the spot" in evident fear as to the intentions of Lucrezia Borgia!

A CHURCH ORGANIST.

It is not generally known—certainly no biography of him records the fact—that the subject of this sketch was for eleven years a church organist. "I gave Cummings lessons in singing," he says, "and he gave me lessons on the organ. I was very fond of the organ, and I used to lock myself in the church until eleven or twelve o'clock at night and practise away, deriving much pleasure in hearing the sounds of the organ." Mr. Randegger was for eleven years organist and choirmaster of St. Paul's Church, Avenue Road, Regent's Park, from its consecration (by Bishop Tait, on February 4, 1859) until 1870. He was also present at the laying of the foundation stone. In those days the choir was one of mixed voices and therefore not surpliced. A very interesting sidelight upon Mr. Randegger's organist period is furnished in a letter written (in connection with this article) to the present organist of St. Paul's, Mr. Edward G. Croager, by whose permission and that of the writer we are enabled to quote from it.

These recollections are from the pen of Mr. James E. Matthew, a well known writer on music, and one of the few original members of the congregation of St. Paul's, in the choir of which Mrs. Matthew sang under Mr. Randegger's regime. Mr. Matthew writes under date "August 28, 1899":—

> I believe that my brother and sister, with myself, are the only original members of the St. Paul's congregation left, and as I soon became very intimate with Mr. Randegger, you could not have applied to anyone so well able to give information in regard to his organistship.
> It was in 1859 that the church was consecrated and at that time surpliced choirs were not so common—one may almost say, invariable—as they are now. In those days "Hymns Ancient and Modern" were only on the stocks and not launched, so that the collection of hymns adopted did not necessitate the use of a particular tune to each hymn; and, of course, from the fact that Randegger was a foreigner, he was in a great measure ignorant of tradition in such matters. This tended to give a distinct character to the services—I think I may say a certain freshness. For instance, if a hymn were put down of some peculiar metre which it was not easy to fit, his practice was to write a tune.
> The nucleus of the choir was a quartet (paid) of singers. Even in those days Randegger was much run after as a teacher of singing, so that it was easy for him to find good voices in exchange for lessons; the choir was therefore generally good. I think he enjoyed it, and in the first winter a meeting was got up of such amateurs as were willing to help and we had our regular practices.
> The Psalms were only chanted in the evening, and this was looked upon as rather an innovation! But no harm came of it. We only had an anthem on great occasions—say at Easter and Christmas. In the early days Madame Rudersdorff would often help at the evening service. The effect of her voice in church, when she did let out, was like putting on Principal, Twelfth, and Fifteenth!
> Our organ, designed by the late G. W. Martin, was of an unusual kind, inasmuch as in addition to the usual swell, the great organ was also enclosed in a swell-box. The organ was of course not paid for, so Randegger got up and conducted in three successive years at the Eyre Arms (then the only concert-room in our parts) "The Messiah," "Creation," "Hymn of Praise," and Handel's "Ode to St. Cecilia's Day." In all of these Rudersdorff was the principal vocalist, and her singing in the Ode was something to remember, especially the bit of solo in the last chorus, "As from the power." I can't think of anyone who could make such an effect now-a-days.
> Randegger was frequently away from town in those days with touring parties, and then he had to find a deputy. In this way I first became acquainted with W. H. Cummings, then a rising tenor. Randegger was intimate with Stirling Coyne, a well-known dramatic critic. His youngest daughter was a pupil of Mrs. Bartholomew, and Randegger was much interested in her career and used to give her lessons on the pianoforte, and so she was naturally very pleased to take the organ for him during his absences. One day he asked the Coynes if they knew of a lady who would come and sing contralto in return for lessons. This they did, and although under his tuition her voice turned out to be a mezzo-soprano, she sang in the church for several years, even after she became Mrs. J. E. Matthew. Miss Amy Coyne, on Randegger's advice, subsequently became a pupil of Ferdinand Hiller, and a few years later was married to my brother. It is not surprising, therefore, that we have pleasant associations with St. Paul's Church and those Randegger days.

A FUNERAL ANTHEM.

An interesting incident of Mr. Randegger's association with St. Paul's, Avenue Road, arose in connection with a Funeral Anthem which he composed upon the death of the Prince Consort, who, it may be remembered, died on a Saturday night. The circumstances connected with this episode may best be told in the composer's own words. "As I was walking to church on the Sunday morning," says Mr. Randegger, "I heard the newspaper boys shouting out the news of the death of Prince Albert. I was greatly affected by the mournful news, as I had a great admiration for the Prince. I decided then and there to compose a Funeral Anthem to commemorate the sad event. The same evening Madame Rudersdorff, at my request, selected words from the Bible. I set to work at once and copied out all the voice parts with my own hand. I rehearsed the anthem during the week, and it was performed on the following Sunday by a choir of thirty voices, amongst whom were several distinguished artists. In no other church in the country was the calamity that had thrilled the nation thus commemorated. Moreover, when the time came for the sermon, the Rev. Dr. Peile, the vicar of the church, addressing the congregation, said: 'After the anthem to which we have listened there is no need for me to preach, as no words of mine are needed to deepen the impression that has been produced by the music.' He then pronounced the benediction and the congregation dispersed." The words of this anthem were taken from Revelation xiv., 15, 16, 13. The composer soon afterwards scored the work and it was performed at a concert given by the Vocal Association, and also between the parts of a "Messiah" performance conducted by Mr. Randegger.

APPOINTMENTS.

A few of the more important events in the life of Mr. Randegger may now be considered in chronological order. On May 2, 1864, his pleasing two-act operetta, "The Rival Beauties" (dedicated to Costa), was first performed at the Theatre Royal, Leeds, with great success. No less than six numbers were encored, and the opera, in which Mr. W. H. Cummings made his first appearance on a stage, was played nightly to appreciative audiences. The other principals were Emily Spiller, Julia Elton, and J. G. Patey. In 1868 Mr. Randegger was appointed a professor of singing at the Royal Academy of Music, a post which he still retains. He has been a member of the Board of Directors and is now on the Committee of Management of our oldest music school, in addition to being an Honorary Member of the Institution. He is also a professor of singing at the Royal College of Music and is on the Board of Professors at the College. He is an Honorary Member of the Madrid Philharmonic Society, and in 1892 he received from the King of Italy the honour of knighthood.

Since 1855, the year after he came to this country, he has attended every Birmingham Musical Festival conducted by Costa. At that of 1873 (August 28) he produced his highly successful dramatic cantata "Fridolin," which has since been so often performed. The libretto was by Madame Rudersdorff. "I owe a great deal to her," he says, "and from her I learned much. For instance, I studied with her, amongst others, all Schubert's songs, of which she had the traditional renderings."

AS A CONDUCTOR.

In January, 1880, he conducted an eventful season of English opera given at Her Majesty's Theatre by the Carl Rosa Opera Company. The following works were produced under his direction for the first time with English text: "Carmen," "The Taming of the Shrew," "Lohengrin," and "Tannhäuser." He also conducted the first performances of Goring Thomas's "Esmeralda" and "Nadeshda," of the former of which he wrote the scenario. He conducted "Esmeralda" when it was sung in English at Drury Lane Theatre; in German, at the Stadt Theater, Hamburg; and in French, at Covent Garden, with Melba, Jean de Reszke, and Lassalle. In 1882 he conducted Henry Leslie's Choir, upon the resignation of its founder.

From the year 1887—when the late Sir Augustus Harris started his régime of Italian opera at Drury Lane—until the season 1898 Mr. Randegger conducted grand opera there and at Covent Garden. He also conducted the Queen's Hall Choral Society for two years (1895-97), during which period Saint-Saëns's "Samson and Delilah" received its first adequate performance in this country (December 3, 1896). He conducted the Queen's Hall orchestra for thirty-two consecutive Sundays, and skilfully steered, clear of disaster, the performance of about 180 symphonic works, concertos, &c., without their having had any rehearsal whatever. He is now honorary conductor of the Imperial Institute orchestra, which numbers 110 effective members, of whom a very large proportion are ladies. He has frequently adjudicated at various Eisteddfodau, and is engaged in that capacity for the Grand National Eisteddfod to be held in Liverpool next year. His connection with the Norwich Musical Festival will be referred to subsequently.

COMPOSITIONS.

In addition to the works already named, Mr. Randegger has composed a scena, "Medea," sung by Madame Rudersdorff at the Leipzig Gewandhaus in 1869, of which the original autograph score is now preserved in the library of the Gewandhaus; "Saffo," sung by Madame Lemmens Sherrington at the British Orchestral Society's concert, March 31, 1875; the 150th Psalm, for soprano solo, chorus, orchestra, and organ, written for the Boston (Mass.) Festival, 1872; and a scena, "The Prayer of Nature" (Byron), for Mr. Edward Lloyd, Philharmonic Society, June 9, 1887. Many of Mr. Randegger's songs and other vocal compositions have been remarkably successful; amongst them may be mentioned "Joyous life" ("Ben è ridicolo"), "Peacefully slumber," and the pleasing trio "I Naviganti" ("The Mariners"). The song "Ben è ridicolo" was very popular during one of the Disraeli Administrations, so much so that Punch found it convenient to metamorphose its title into "Ben is ridiculous"!

None of Mr. Randegger's works have, however, attained the extraordinary popularity of his "Singing" primer, written at the suggestion of Messrs. Novello, of which an enormous number of copies have been sold, and which, in all English-speaking countries, is now accepted as a text-book.

AS A SINGING MASTER .

As a teacher of singing Mr. Randegger has a wide and justly deserved reputation, not only in England, but amongst Americans. Much of his success in this respect may be attributed to his life-long methods of close observation and careful attention to details. He has always been, and, in fact, is now an assiduous student. For twenty years he attended regularly all the Saturday concerts at the Crystal Palace, taking with him, as often as he could, the full scores of the works performed. "Why don't you study your scores at home?" enquired Davison of him one day at Sydenham. The reply was characteristic of the man: "I do not bring the scores here to learn them, but to realise more completely their effect upon the ear." At every performance of a new work, which he rarely misses, Mr. Randegger listens with score and pencil in hand, and as the work proceeds he will note down all breath places, dynamic indications, phrasing, ritardations, &c., with the most minute exactness. It is interesting to examine his copy from which he followed the first performance of such works as Sullivan's "Golden Legend," Gounod's "Redemption," and many similar compositions which he had subsequently to conduct himself, as examples of his thoroughness in this respect. His well known editions of Handel's oratorio songs, the airs from Mendelssohn's "Elijah," &c., are based upon such observations, and thus they are of special value to singers. Is it then any wonder that he is much sought after, even by experienced singers, as a reliable and well informed adviser on operatic and oratorio matters?

FAULTS OF SINGERS.

In regard to the æsthetics of singing, he lays great stress upon the importance of the words—their correct pronunciation and distinct articulation. He says: "So many people when they sing use their conversational English, which in nine cases out of ten is not good. They fail to sound their final consonants and to make the most of their vowels. In regard to the matter of pronunciation, I find that the Welsh are particularly good in their singing of English words; probably with most of them English is an acquired language. It is very important that singers should analyse the words and recite them aloud before singing them, and enter thoroughly into the spirit of the various moods which a song may suggest. Take, for instance, the sublime air, 'I know that my Redeemer liveth.' What a revelation was Jenny Lind's interpretation of it! She would sing the opening phrase in a subdued and pensive manner, the second time with more warmth, and when it returned in the subdominant key (A) the words 'I know' were brought out in a manner assertive of the fullest and strongest conviction."

NOTABILITIES HE HAS MET.

Mr. Randegger has met with many interesting people during his long career. He used to visit Sir Michael Costa at his residence in Eccleston Square every Sunday for many years. Costa, who was a most business-like man, had displayed on the wall, posted above his writing-desk, a notice to the following effect:

> "If you come on business, do your business, and go about your business."

"Costa," says Mr. Randegger, "was a martinet in regard to the discipline of the orchestra, but the present artistic position of the players is entirely due to him. Although a tyrant, he always supported his men, and always made sure that they received such fees as were due to their merits."

Benedict was also an old friend and Mr. Randegger became his executor. In this connection he acquired all Benedict's music, papers, and autograph letters "from great men of all sorts." Benedict never destroyed anything. All his old cheque books were carefully preserved amongst this paper accumulation of fifty years—"in fact," says Mr. Randegger, "he even kept all his household bills!"

Another attached friend was Ferdinand Hiller, whom he visited at Cologne as often as he could. On one of these occasions, while Randegger was dining with Hiller, the evening issue of the Cologne Gazette was brought in. It contained the announcement of a rumour that Wagner was expected in Cologne for the purpose of personally conducting the performance of a cycle of his operas at the Stadt Theater, and further praising Wagner's moral courage in coming into the camp of his bitterest enemies. Hiller at once took to himself the hint conveyed in the concluding words of the article, for he had never hesitated to express publicly in his writings the antagonism he felt towards many of Wagner's ideas, more especially—and for obvious reasons—those contained in the pamphlet "Judaism in Music." Immediately upon reading the announcement, Hiller wrote to the editor of the paper, declaring that as a musician he, himself, would be the first to rejoice at the opportunity of hearing Wagner's operas conducted by the composer, especially as Wagner, on those occasions, would use a baton, and not a pen !

The last time Mr. Randegger visited his friend, Hiller was suffering from the illness which eventually proved fatal. After spending together, in delightful and interesting conversation, the best part of a summer afternoon, the "Altmeister" quietly withdrew from the room, and did not return. A little later Frau Hiller feelingly explained that her husband had left them thus because he could not bear the pain of taking what he felt would be a final farewell from anyone he loved.

At Dr. Hiller's invitation Mr. Randegger attended the great Beethoven Centenary Festival at Bonn in 1870. There he met, for the first time, Max Bruch and Joachim Raff, and, on this occasion, the latter gave a description of his "Im Walde" Symphony, then in process of composition. Joachim was engaged to play Beethoven's Violin Concerto at that Festival, and at the performance of the Ninth Symphony he modestly played amongst the first violins in the orchestra, sitting at the same desk with the leader, Joseph Wasielewsky, the biographer of Schumann. During the Festival week Mr. Randegger, in the congenial company of Sir George Grove, paid a reverent visit to Schumann's grave in the cemetery at Bonn.

PERSONALIA.

Amongst the treasures of Mr. Randegger's study are ten Mozart manuscripts which formerly belonged to Andrè, of Offenbach. They are signed and dated by the composer, and the very essence of neatness in their small, but easily decipherable caligraphy.

Various portraits of artistic celebrities adorn the walls. One of Liszt bears the autograph inscription—

April, /86. London. F. Liszt.

another of Verdi—

a Randegger.
G. Verdi.
Londra. 24 Maggio, 1878.

another of Saint-Saëns and Mancinelli—

All' amico e collega Alberto Randegger.
C. Saint-Saëns, L. Mancinelli.
Londra. Luglio, 1898.

An interesting personal treasure is the gold watch he always carries. It is a jubilee birthday present and bears upon it the following inscription:

> Presented to Alberto Randegger, Esqre., by his affectionate pupils of the Royal Academy of Music, in token of their esteem and friendship. London: April 13, 1882.
> Mary Davies, Irene Ware, Jessie Jones, Clara Samuel Rose, Marian McKenzie, Kate Steel, Gertrude Richardson, Saidie Geary, Amy Aylward, Annie Butterworth, Annie Grey, Frances Harrison, Kate Tully, Mary Grey, Gertrude Rolls, Clara ter Meer, Kate Bentley, Lexie Ehrenberg, Emiliè Lloyd, Anne Mudie-Bolingbroke, R. Miles, Jack Robertson, Lucas Williams, James Sauvage.

Mr. Randegger possesses a library of upwards of 2,000 books and scores, which have been carefully catalogued by his faithful manservant, William Cox, who has been in his service for thirty years. "William" can copy music, correct orchestral parts, take photographs, and look after correspondence; moreover, he is the steward and general factotum in the household—"a most invaluable man," his master rightly affirms.

THE NORWICH FESTIVAL.

In 1881, after the resignation of Sir Julius Benedict, Mr. Randegger was appointed to the conductorship of the Norwich Musical Festival, which important post he has ever since held with highly satisfactory results. At the close of the present music-making in the Eastern capital he will have conducted seven triennial Festivals, and thus he will have "come of age" as a Festival conductor. Some idea of the importance of the work that has been done during that period may be gathered from the following digest.

"St. Ursula" (Cowen), "The Sun Worshippers" (Goring Thomas), Overture, "King Henry V." (Walter Macfarren), "The Harvest Festival" (J. Barnett).

1884.

"Elegiac Ode" (Stanford), "The Rose of Sharon" (Mackenzie), Scena, "Apollo's Invocation" (Massenet).

1887.

"The Garden of Olivet" (Bottesini), "The Holy Vision" (Gounod), "The Song of Judith" (Prout), "Isaiah" (Mancinelli).

1890.

"L'Allegro ed il Pensieroso" (Hubert Parry).

Symphony in A minor, No. 2 (German), Polish Fantasia, Pianoforte and Orchestra (Paderewski), "Una" (Gaul), "The Wishing Bell" (J. F. Barnett), "The Water Lily" (Cowen).

1896.

Violin Concerto in D minor (Frederic Cliffe), "Hero and Leander" (Mancinelli), "Phaudrig Crohoore" (Stanford).

The present month will witness another Norwich Festival, with Mr. Randegger again at the helm. The genial teacher and composer may rest assured that he has many well-wishers for the safe steering of his vessel across the sea of efficiency to the land of artistic success.

A CHURCH BARREL-ORGAN.

Is it possible to find a church wherein a barrel-organ is in use at its services? Yes, it is, and, moreover, within twenty-five miles of London. Here followeth the proof thereof.

In the course of a visit to the factory of Messrs. J. W. Walker and Sons, I accidentally learned that some employés of that old-established organ-building firm were then engaged upon repairing a barrel-organ at a church in Kent. A barrel-organ in a church! One that was in regular use! It seemed incredible. However, Messrs. Walker were good enough to supply me with the name of the clergyman of the church. To him I wrote stating that I should like, with his permission, to see and hear the organ so that I might write something about it in The Musical Times. He not only gave a courteous consent to my request, but kindly invited me to be his guest for "a week end."

Accordingly on a September Saturday I found myself at Wrotham station, on the Maidstone branch of the London, Chatham and Dover Railway. A pleasant walk of three miles brought me to the picturesque rectory of Trottiscliffe, where the rector, the Rev. Charles W. Shepherd, dispensed a warm hospitality.

Trottiscliffe, the village in question, appears in the Postal Guide as Trotterscliffe. The local appellation of the place is, however, "Trosley," pronounced "Trowsley"; but Trottiscliffe is a nearer approach to the ancient form of its designation—Trottesclyve. It is most beautifully situated on rising ground and sheltered on the North by a range of chalk hills, from which magnificent and extensive panoramic views may be obtained. How little the dwellers in the great Metropolis realise that an environment so charming is within such easy reach of their "smoky nest." The village, which in its present depopulated state contains less than 300 inhabitants, formerly included one of the manor houses of the mediæval Bishops of Rochester. A portion of that old episcopal habitation—the house standing behind the church—is shown in the illustration. The good Bishop would sail up the Medway in his state barge, and, landing at Halling, would proceed on his palfrey along the pilgrim road —which is still traversable—to the seclusion of Trottesclyve. Ancient records show that these old divines were very partial to the place, and no wonder.

TROTTISCLIFFE CHURCH, KENT.

The church is a structure of great antiquity. The chancel is at least 800 years old, as the Domesday Survey mentions a church here in or about A.D. 1085-86. But the wide-jointed masonry in the eastern portion of the structure seems to point to a still earlier period. In the year 788, Offa, King of Mercia, "gave a portion of his possessions called 'Trottesclib,' containing six ploughlands, to the church of St. Andrew in Rochester, for religious purposes." It is possible, therefore, that Trottiscliffe affords an example of a church erected in Anglo-Saxon times. The Norman windows of the chancel call for special notice. Two of these windows in the North wall are in their original state on the exterior. There is no sill of ashlar to them. It is difficult to discover in Kent any example of the earliest Norman walling and windows so well preserved and so unaltered as those in the chancel of Trottiscliffe Church, thanks to the care of the rector. The nave is of the transition period, between Norman and Early English. The plan of the church as it now exists was formed and completed about A.D. 1200: thus it has remained for 700 years. The outer West wall—that shown in the photograph—was rebuilt by Mr. Shepherd, the present rector, at a cost of £800. It is an excellent and rare example of cut flint work, which gives the appearance of a highly-glazed external of peculiar beauty combined with lasting solidity. It is not surprising that Mr. Shepherd, who was born at Trottiscliffe rectory, takes a special interest in the church; his father was rector before him for nearly fifty years—thus father and son have held the living for close upon three-quarters of a century.

In regard to the interior of the church, its most striking feature—next, of course, to the barrel-organ, which in one sense is not a striking feature—is the pulpit, which came from Westminster Abbey in October, 1824. The tradition associated with its acquirement is this. A London distiller—James Seager, by name—one day met the architect of the Abbey. "Do you want a pulpit?" asked the architect. "Yes," replied the distiller, "I do, for a church in Kent." Thereupon the pulpit was carted down in one of the distiller's drays and duly erected in Trottiscliffe Church. But the sounding-board came not. Upon application being made to the Dean and Chapter for this appendage, the Westminster divines were so exceeding wroth at their pulpit having been disposed of in that irregular way that they refused to part with the sounding-board. However, it ultimately found its way to Trottiscliffe, and there it is to-day. This sounding-board is a handsome piece of inlaid wood-work, supported by a slight pillar of white wood, which is intended to represent a palm tree. The prevailing characteristics of Trottiscliffe Church are more ancient than modern. The interesting Elizabethan chalice was made in 1576, and a paten upon a foot dates from 1699. The wills of old parishioners throw a curious light upon the mediæval furniture of the church. For instance, in 1451, an image of the Virgin Mary stood in the church, with a light burning before it, and "to find a taper to burn before the image," one Richard Rowse bequeathed a cow worth eight shillings. In the apex of one of the nave windows is a mediæval design which must be almost unique in a parish church. It represents the Holy Trinity. Contrary to Scriptural teaching, and to the orthodox doctrines of the Church, God the Father ("whom no man hath seen at any time") is represented as a man. Upon His knees is a crucifix, symbolical of the sacrifice made by God the Son, over whose head appears the Sacred Dove, as the symbol of the third Person of the Blessed Trinity. The sun, moon, and stars are represented by accessory details.

The parish registers, which are in excellent condition and which have been carefully indexed by the present rector, date from 1540. It is very interesting to turn over the pages of that old parchment book, the first register. One entry of a baptism records that the rite took place on the same day as King Charles was beheaded! I was specially interested in finding the name of Attwood. It appears as early as 1543, when a George Attwood was baptised. Entries of the name, with slightly varied spelling, are to be found extending over 130 years (1543-1673). One Attwood is described as "the honest gent." James Atwoode, who died in 1600 and who lies under an altar-tomb in the churchyard, is designated "the guid housber," an odd word which may mean husband or householder. The inscription on his tomb is as follows:—

OF JAMES ATWOODE GENTE

Were these Attwood Trottiscliffians the ancestors of Mozart's English pupil and the "dear old Mr. Attwood" of Mendelssohn?

It is now time to turn to the barrel-organ, which, by the way, I had the privilege of turning on the Saturday evening of my visit. The instrument, placed at the extreme West end of the church, is the handiwork of T. C. Bates and Son, 6, Ludgate Hill. It has six stops—bourdon, open diapason, stopped diapason, principal, dulciana, and fifteenth. There are six barrels, of which only three can be placed in the instrument at the same time—the three remaining rotaries being in reserve for use when required. As each barrel contains ten tunes, there is, all told, a selection of sixty tunes. The three chants originally on the barrels have been taken off, and thus there is no chanting at the morning service, at which it should be stated the barrel-organ is only used. Some of the old repeat tunes have been replaced by modern examples, though such ancient specimens as "Job" and "Old 11th" yet remain. I selected "Aurelia" for my recital, and in grinding out the familiar strains I thought to myself: "What would Dr. S. S. Wesley have said to such a revolutionary proceeding!" There are no Amens to the tunes, for an obvious reason. In this connection a curious thing happened. One of the barrels was sent to London to have an old tune exchanged for a modern one. The artificer inserted pins to produce the orthodox "Amen." What was the result? There came forth an Amen at the end of every verse!

The service on the Sunday morning of my visit was one of extreme simplicity. The entire Office, including the Canticles, was read. Three hymns, from Windle's collection, are usually sung; but when, as on this occasion, the Holy Communion is celebrated, only two hymns are included in the service. These were sung to the tunes "St. Michael" and "St. Peter." The tune was played (or ground) over by the organist, who also discharges the duties of sexton. It must be admitted that the general effect was not altogether displeasing to the sympathetic listener. The tone of the organ, which was of a sweetly mellowed quality, blended well with the voices, and the congregation sang heartily. If the organist did not furnish much variety in the way of stop registration and expression, he played no wrong notes and he kept very good time.

PROFESSOR PARKER ON ENGLISH EXECUTIVE MUSICIANS.

AN ECHO OF THE WORCESTER FESTIVAL.

Socialism was rampant at the recent Worcester Festival. Not, be it observed, a socialism of the Hyde Park oratory kind, but that which draws soul to soul, revives old memories, and makes new friends. These externals of the Festival furnish that which our American kinsfolk designate "a good time."

It was during one of the social intervals between the actual music-makings that Professor Horatio W. Parker kindly afforded "our special correspondent" at the Worcester Festival an opportunity for a chat concerning the impressions that the distinguished American composer had received in regard to the performance of music in the old country. Seated in a pleasant sunny room, under the shadow of the stately Cathedral, Professor Parker willingly consented to answer a few questions, the first of which related to chorus singing. Although this was by no means his first visit to England, he had had no opportunity of hearing an English festival choir, as his previous sojourns in the old country had taken place in the non-choral season.

It should be stated that choral preparations for the Worcester Festival are made in four places at the same time—in Worcester, which supplies the bulk of the chorus; in Gloucester, in Hereford (the cities of the "Three Choirs"), and in Leeds, which town furnishes a contingent of forty-four voices.

"I held," says Professor Parker, "choral rehearsals in Worcester, Gloucester, and Leeds during the interval which elapsed between my arrival in England and the Festival. I never shall forget the first of these rehearsals. It was as unexpected as it was delightful. I arrived in Worcester expecting to hear a rehearsal under Mr. Atkins's leadership. But he was suspended in transit from Yorkshire by a defective locomotive, and I was at once asked to take charge. The fine volume and quality of the Worcester chorus, the business-like way in which they did their work, the intelligent sympathy they showed, and, above all, their cordial, hospitable welcome to a strange brother-musician from another country, all combined to make me feel at home. It was really a homelike feeling, as though I had come to visit relations of whom I had often heard, but whom I had never seen personally. It was an altogether delightful experience, and I am proud and glad of the opportunity afforded me to make acquaintances and friends among my brother musicians in this fine old country.

"The Gloucester contingent contained a splendid lot of basses. The Yorkshire singers gave a sensitive responsiveness to my wishes as conductor which was entirely admirable. If they always show this quality in the same degree they must indeed be an ideal instrument for the interpretation of choral music. I regret that I did not have an opportunity of hearing the Hereford section separately.

"It is hardly in order that I should make comparisons otherwise than mentally between our methods and those in use in England. But one or two things strike me that you may like to mention. In the first place, there is better material here and the singers often receive remuneration, whereas American chorus-singers usually pay for the privilege of singing, and, moreover, they frequently buy their own music. In England there is a larger and more dense population to draw upon for singers and for the support of music; thus music seems to be more easily brought close to the people. The daily services in your magnificent Cathedrals keep music in people's minds and hearts. We have comparatively little church music and that not always of the best quality. When the Puritans came to Massachusetts they brought with them only about half-a-dozen of their crabbedest psalm-tunes. They had an instinctive distrust of anything beautiful in divine service, for which we are now paying the penalty. Their influence made real live church music impossible for the best part of two centuries and, in fact, it is still felt.

"I think that the sight of the Three Choirs and their choirmasters working together, each one unselfishly giving of his best efforts to aid the others, with the sure confidence that such efforts will be duly reciprocated—I think this in itself is inspiring. Your fine Cathedrals give a touch of ineffable beauty and holiness to sacred music which is exquisite to all who are open to the influences of art."

Have you anything to say on the subject of music in England?

"It would not become me to criticise English music unfavourably even if I could, but I have no desire to do so. I had always supposed that the English took their music in a matter-of-fact business-like way, so that the more delicate shades of the art were apt to be overlooked. Moreover, I have heard it said in Germany and France that the English were not a musical race. But, distinctly contrary to those opinions, I find a delicacy in your choral singing to which the large chorus-choirs in Germany, at least, are still strangers. I can safely say that there is no choral singing on the Continent to compare with that of the best English chorus."

And then in regard to the English orchestras, Professor Parker—take, for instance, that engaged for the present Festival?

"Well, fine as that orchestra is, we have equally good ones in America. Only they are not American, nor are they English. It warms my heart to look at the names of these excellent players in this Festival band—such names as Smith, Jones, Robinson, Black, White, Brown, and Green. Very different are the patronymics of our players—Pfeiffenschneider, Schumacher, Schwartz, Weiss, Braun, Grün, Roth, &c., which give a very strong indication of Teutonic origin. I yield to no one in admiration of the excellent work done by the Germans in our country, in your country, and in their own, but I wish we had an American orchestra. We shall have one in time; but, in the meantime, fine as our orchestras are, I envy you your English-speaking, English-born band. It is a fitting complement to your splendid English chorus."

Have you formed any opinion upon our organists?

"Yes. The standard of organ playing in England is very high. Its technical attainment is excellent, and, moreover, it is allied with a refined taste, rare judgment, and commendable discretion which is very remarkable. I have no hesitation in saying that there are more good organists in England than in any country in the world."

Thus the Professor chats on in his thoughtful, pleasant manner, with that modest reserve which is so characteristic of him. He refers to the great kindness he has received during his sojourn in this country, and gives emphatic expression to his high appreciation of English musicians. But it is hardly fair to detain him any longer. Has not his host, Mr. Ivor Atkins, entered the room clad in raiment uncathedralesque? A minute or two later the composer of "Hora Novissima" and the organist of Worcester Cathedral are on their "bikes" and are threading their way through the crowded and Festival-bedecked streets of the "faithful city."

SOME RECOLLECTIONS.

XI.—Critics I have known.

Contemporary with J. W. Davison during nearly the whole of his career were Howard Glover and Desmond Ryan, Sen. The three names in the foregoing sentence are not unfittingly brought together, since it was a very open secret that the masterful critic of The Times influenced his colleagues of the Morning Post and Standard in no ordinary measure; this state of things being due not only to the personal magnetism of the most powerful member of the trio, but also to his literary and musical superiority. Ryan, who, as far as I am aware, made no special pretension to musicianship, was for a long period assistant-editor of the Musical World—that is to say, he spent two half-days of each week in Davison's company; thence deriving not a few of his opinions and, perhaps, all his way of looking at things. The two men, chief and subordinate, were thoroughly attached to each other; their association stood the test of many years, and only when Ryan was called away by a summons which must needs be obeyed did it come to an end. Readers of the Musical World, as issued in the fourth, fifth, and sixth decades of the century, may see for themselves what were the relations of the two critics and—very clearly—which was "boss." An instance connected with the death of Mendelssohn occurs to me. When that light of music was extinguished in the dark days of '47, Davison was in Paris, wholly unsuspicious of the danger which threatened the god of his idolatry. Indeed, the first intimation of what had happened at Leipzig was received by the critic of The Times when, casually glancing at a newspaper lying on a friend's table, he saw the fatal heading "Death of Mendelssohn." Davison had gone to dine with his friend and meet a company of distinguished composers and writers; from one of whom we learn that the effect of the news upon him was really alarming. He fell fainting to the ground, and when brought back to consciousness, gave vent to his grief in the most distressing manner. He would not be comforted. The most fascinating of composers had so far thrown his spell over the most emotional and tender-hearted of critics. Meanwhile it was for Ryan, at his post in London, to deal with the tragic event as best he could, and the result was an article excellent in intention, but poor in touch, and not quite accurate as to facts. We may gather an idea of Davison's feelings on reading his sub's leader from the tone and terms of a letter promptly despatched to Ryan, and by him inserted in the next issue of the paper. Briefly, the subordinate was set right as to facts, and desired to leave Mendelssohn to his principal. But Ryan had no stauncher friend than the chief on the Musical World, and none stood by him more steadfastly through the uncomfortable experiences attending a temporary break in his connection with the Standard.

The circumstances leading to that break may be mentioned here, because, while no great blame attached to anyone concerned, they illustrate some of the difficulties under which the duties of a musical critic are discharged. Ryan was somewhat hard worked on the Standard, and often perceived a divided duty without the power to be in two places at once. This was the case on a certain occasion when two engagements were booked for the same evening. One was the production of a new opera—"La Traviata," if I remember rightly—the other an entertainment of some importance in a different quarter of the town. In face of this dilemma poor Ryan resolved to attend the dress rehearsal of the opera, and write his criticism in the morning of the day of performance. This would of course leave him free to deal with the second engagement in the evening. The notice was accordingly prepared, and an arrangement made for its delivery at the Standard office at the proper time. Rash, no doubt, but there were mitigations. Ryan arranged to meet Davison at the Albion after the discharge of his second duty, and hear from him particulars of the operatic performance. But, on the fateful evening, though Ryan went to the Albion, Davison did not. His absence was taken as assurance that all had gone well, and that there was nothing to communicate. Unhappily, the performance did not take place, and the Standard came out next morning with a full and particular account of an event which had not happened at all. Ryan was forthwith suspended, if not dismissed; but his friends saw many extenuating circumstances. Davison was not least active in the cause. He interested both Mr. Gye and Mr. Costa on the fallen critic's behalf, and it was, I believe, through their intercession that Ryan came back out of the wilderness and saw himself reinstated in his old post.

My personal acquaintance with Desmond Ryan was slight, his death taking place not long after I came upon the scene; but there can be no doubt of his amiability, and no question whatever of the fact that he brought to his multifarious duties as a journalist the qualities of geniality, brightness, and aptitude which carry so many Irishmen into the high places of the press. It is worthy of note that Ryan was succeeded on the Standard by his son, Desmond Ryan, Jun., since whose premature taking off a Ryan of the third generation has found a place on the same important journal.

Howard Glover, of the Morning Post, had made music a study, although that course was no more then than now regarded as essential to occupancy of the critic's chair. As a composer he obtained a measure of repute; his setting of "Tam o' Shanter" being at one time somewhat a favourite in concert-rooms, while various smaller works attracted attention and patronage. Glover, however, was one of the men who stand more or less in their own light, and are often hard set by consequent lack of illumination. Nothing succeeded under his hand for any length of time, though he was not wanting in enterprise. As a giver of occasional concerts he at one period held a conspicuous place, and was bold enough to carry through a performance of Beethoven's "Pastoral" Symphony, with illustrative scenic effects, on the stage of Drury Lane Theatre. For this venture Glover was roundly assailed by a few of his critical brethren. It is, however, an idea which did not shock Mendelssohn, but won his approval when proposed for a private entertainment in Germany. Glover, as a critic, by no means attained success, though he often wrote well and knew his subject better than most. As between public and journalist distrust is fatal. Somehow it rose like a mist between Glover and the world of musical readers, with the result that, whether deserved or not, his influence was undermined and his usefulness decayed. So complete was the failure that his friends ultimately raised a fund and sent the man and his family to the United States, in the hope that he might there make a fresh start. But the habits of years could not be shaken off, and the only change was a change of place.

Glover was succeeded on the Morning Post by H. Sutherland Edwards. Memory does not enable me to speak with confidence, and I will only say that there may have been an interregnum of Gruneison; he returning, pro tem., to the journal long associated with his name. But however that may have been, Edwards found himself in the seat vacated by the composer of "Tam o' Shanter," and remained in that position for some time. I need hardly say that "H. S. E." is still living and working. The fact embarrasses me not a little. I should like to speak more freely in his praise than is possible at a time when he may chance to read my words. But I need not be altogether silent, and, in the first place, let me correct a mistake often made as between my friend and myself. It is sometimes proclaimed in print that the present writer is the doyen of London musical critics. I am not able rightfully to claim that melancholy distinction. The honour in question belongs to Sutherland Edwards, who was well established as critic of the Pall Mall Gazette when I wrote my first concert notice in the Sunday Times. Those were the halcyon days of the Pall Mall Gazette—days when Smith was proprietor and Frederic Greenwood editor, and when the paper, "written by gentlemen for gentlemen," held an easy lead among evening journals for its literary style and general excellence. I should have said above that Edwards was a critic of the Pall Mall Gazette, because, as a matter of fact, Greenwood enjoyed the services of J. W. Davison also; he writing the concert articles and Edwards being responsible for the operatic columns, while both shared the reviews of musical books.

Talking of reviews in the Pall Mall Gazette, I can never forget the delightful irony which Sutherland Edwards lavished upon one of the publications of the egregious John Ella, who was all his life a fair butt for the shafts of humour. Nothing could be more exquisite than the reviewer's description of the Musical Union, its founder, its duchesses, and its property. He spoke of the library of that institution as a collection of books "to which subscribers have the privilege of contributing," the rules apparently not recognising any likelihood of a subscriber desiring to read. For playfulness, good humour, and "pinpricks" that article was an example of the writer in his best mood, and striking evidence of the strength of the Pall Mall Gazette in its musico-literary department. I do not suppose that Sutherland Edwards was very happy in his place on the Morning Post. The drudgery of every-day journalism; the obligation to attend unworthy concerts and write "all round" unworthy artists, could not have been congenial. Even to an onlooker, who knew the circumstances, it was absurd. One does not apply a Damascus blade to the cutting of cabbages. In the pages of the Pall Mall Gazette, on the other hand, Edwards was at home. There he could choose his own time and theme, adopt his own style, and be very sure of editorial appreciation and public approval. In the course of a few years, this charming writer retired from the Post; but when the Pall Mall Gazette changed hands and Frederic Greenwood resigned, to edit a new evening paper, the St. James's Gazette, Edwards followed his old chief, and remains with him to this day. Apropos to his rupture of relations with the Morning Post, I may mention a unique circumstance in my own career. As soon as it was known that the critical chair in Wellington Street was vacant, Davison strenuously urged me to offer myself as a fit and proper person to fill it. I objected; pointing out that I never had applied for any position, and did not care to risk refusal. But my good friend insisted; made me write a letter under his own eyes, and despatched it to the office of the journal. No notice whatever was taken of the missive. The courtesy of the Post did not go as far as a formal acknowledgment. Naturally I was vexed, and Davison received a bit of my mind for luring me into paths I had never before trodden. The point of the story lies in the fact that the only position for which I ever asked was refused me. Moral: Don't ask. Wait. A report spread that the authorities at the office of the Post had made up their minds to seek a critic outside the professional ranks. They did this by choosing the late W. A. Barrett, a vicar-choral of St. Paul's, who served them till his death.

Referring back to the Pall Mall Gazette and its two musical critics, I must complete the story by adding that in 1867, or thereabout, I was privileged to make a third on that journal. This was due to Davison, who pointed out to Greenwood that I could very well take over the department of Church music. So the arrangement stood—Opera (Edwards), Concerts (Davison), Church Music (Bennett). Inasmuch, however, as Davison's contributions soon became irregular, my work gradually spread over the concert-rooms, and included articles on particular composers, &c. Of the last-named, one in which I discussed the music of Schumann attracted considerable notice. Schumann, at that time, was little understood, and even less liked, in London. Davison's influence over his fellow critics exerted itself powerfully against him, and for some time I myself was hostile. But the composer's music, as it became more familiar, grew also more acceptable, till, at last, in the article just referred to, I plainly declared adherence to his cause. George Grove, champion of Schumannism, was delighted. I have not forgotten his coming to me at a Monday Pop. and declaring, with characteristic enthusiasm (and with the exaggeration which enthusiasm breeds) that the Pall Mall Gazette essay "opened a new era in London musical criticism." How far this was correct seemed to me a matter of indifference. I rejoiced at having spoken out, although it involved the eating of a great many stale words, and I reassured myself by remembering that somebody had said: "A man who never changes his opinion is a fool."

Joseph Bennett.

"Grove's Dictionary" has become a household word wherever the art of music is studied and practised. But this does not by any means imply that the book is in every musical household. The reason is not far to seek. Its cost, £4 11s. 6d., has militated against its general acquisition. This obstacle, we are very glad to say, will shortly be removed. Messrs. Novello are about to issue, for a limited period, the four volumes and index (in cloth) at a cost of two pounds—that is to say, at less than half the original published price. But there may still be those desirous of possessing so invaluable a work who may not find it convenient to pay down even this sum. To meet such cases, Messrs. Novello have made arrangements to supply the work on the instalment principle. In this way six monthly payments of seven shillings will enable anyone to acquire a copy of "Grove," as the dictionary is familiarly called. Such facilities for obtaining so useful, so valuable, and, speaking from a wide knowledge of its contents, so interesting a book to every lover of music will, we feel sure, be extensively embraced; and thus the work, with which the honoured name of Sir George Grove will be handed down to posterity, will start upon a fresh career of usefulness. Full particulars of this important re-issue will be found in our advertisement columns.

Professor Parker was the hero of the hour at the Worcester Musical Festival. His genial personality seems to have won all hearts. It so happened that his thirty-sixth birthday fell on one of the days of the Festival—September 15. With this knowledge the choir made a sixpenny collection amongst their ranks, with which was purchased a large, handsome Worcester porcelain vase, standing about eighteen inches high, to present to him, as a token of affection and esteem from the Festival chorus. The painting and design of the vase were very chaste and original, and it is the first of its kind to cross the Atlantic. The presentation was made to Professor Parker on the Cathedral Green by Mr. J. W. Somerton, the choir superintendent, on behalf and in the presence of the donors.

Mr. Somerton said it was not often that the Superintendent of the choir had such a pleasant duty to perform. He was the man whom the chorus relied upon—and kicked. On their behalf he offered to Professor Parker their best wishes, many happy returns of the day, and all health, wealth, and prosperity. They hoped they might have the pleasure of singing some other work of his at another time. They had found him to be what a Worcester (Mass.) lady described him—"a vur nice man." He had won the hearts of the chorus.

Professor Parker in reply made a speech of nonchalant humour, characteristic of his countrymen. He said it was impossible for him to thank them adequately for their kindness. He had never had so many pleasant things said of him as during his visit to Worcester. He felt really as if he were reading his own obituary. He begged them to think of the risks to him of such a course of treatment. As soon as he arrived Mr. Atkins began acts of kindness, and they had continued the practice. It was a most delightful sensation, but he was much afraid that they would spoil him. It had been said that art belonged to no nationality. It might fairly be said to bind nations together. France, no doubt, thought the better of Germany for her composers, and Germany the better of France for her artists—better for her artists than her army. He hoped the art that they all pursued would prove a new tie between the United States and Old England. There were plenty of ties, but there could not be too many, and they could not be too strong. He was very proud that that beautiful art had brought him to England to see and to learn their methods of music-making and to meet so many warm-hearted, generous-minded friends. He was not equal to the situation and had no hope of improving as he went on. He thanked them for their kindly welcome and the continued hospitality while he had been with them. He thanked the chorus for their artistic appreciation and for their support in giving his work such a magnificent performance. He thanked them for their very good will and their handsome token of it, and concluded by saying: "Good-bye, God bless you. I hope I shall see you again."

A member of the chorus in a private letter supplements the above report by the following: "Professor Parker said that the performance of his 'Hora Novissima' exceeded his highest expectations, and in wishing us 'good-bye' he seemed almost overcome with emotion. There was a regular scramble to get at him for a last handshake, and Mr. Somerton had great difficulty in getting us all into our places for the second part of 'The Messiah.'"

Dr. Sinclair was another specially interesting notability at the Festival. He played the organ at the evening performances and also at the five o'clock services. But the organist of Hereford Cathedral has a decided penchant for the drums. He "took the sticks" at the opening service on Sunday afternoon, except in Wagner's "Kaiser-Marsch," for the reason that he had not attended the rehearsal; he also "drummed" throughout "The Messiah" performance. Dr. Sinclair has a pair of drums in his own house, and, moreover, he teaches all his choirboys to play that instrument of percussion. He says that there is nothing like the drums for giving a boy a sense of rhythm, and thus inoculating him, as it were, with one of the essentials towards the making of a good conductor. Rhythm and conductors are none too plentiful. Dr. Sinclair may therefore be encouraged to go on with his beneficent work. The Hereford choirboys are a fortunate set of young gentlemen.

The veterans at Worcester were well represented by Mr. Andrew Deakin, of Birmingham, who, hale and hearty in 1899, was present at the Birmingham Musical Festival of 1837. It might naturally be assumed that Mr. Deakin would live in the past; but he is much interested in the men of the present day. To sit next to him during the performance of Mr. Elgar's "Variations" was no less enjoyable than a talk with him, over "a crust of bread and cheese," about the music-makings of sixty years ago and the treasures of his musical library. Sir Hubert Parry, bearing traces of "a life on the ocean wave," was, as usual, the embodiment of geniality. There were lay clerks from Gloucester who knew "the Doctor." How they smile at the mention of his (Wesley's) name. Here is an old Festival story. A rehearsal of the overture to "Zampa" was in progress. The band had played the final chord and yet the baton was still in action. The principal violin went up to the conductor and said: "We've finished, Doctor." "Finished! why I have twelve more bars."

The electric telegraph was responsible for one or two curious misinformations in the reports received from more than one "special correspondent" of the London dailies. In enumerating some of the distinguished personages present at the full rehearsal, a usually well-informed scribe was credited with saying that—

> "Sir Herbert (sic) Parry, too, was there, with his daughter, only recently married to Mr. Plunket Greene, the eminent basso. The tall figure was slightly bent; for the most genial and wittiest of the Cathedral staff is approaching three score years and ten."

Not only did Plunket Greene become canonised by this slip of the wires, but just a few too many years were added to his actual length of days. If in the latter sentence of the above extract the reader inserts the name of the venerable Canon Melville he will not be far wrong. Another startling piece of news was a notice of a performance of Beethoven's seventeenth symphony! Would that we had it and the intervening seven!

Edinburgh, after all, is not the only University of Great Britain where the teaching of music forms part of the curriculum. Victoria University (Manchester) has even an older claim for its initiation than the seat of learning in the Scottish capital. Three colleges—Owens, the University College of Liverpool, and the Yorkshire College—are affiliated, and thus form the Victoria University. Owens College is the oldest of the three, and by the terms of the charter (granted in 1880) is the seat of the University. Instruction in music is, however, only given at Owens College; therefore all graduates in music, whether from Liverpool or Leeds, pass through the Owens classes. Many years ago Sir Frederick Bridge, then organist of Manchester Cathedral, held classes at Owens. This duty is now most efficiently discharged by Dr. Henry Hiles, who prevailed upon the Principal of Owens to entertain the proposal of establishing a Faculty of Music meeting all University requirements, with preliminary examinations (as in other faculties) in certain literary and scientific matters. The conditions were carefully drawn up by Dr. Hiles, duly scrutinized and ultimately adopted. A three years' course of lectures was ordered, together with sessional examinations held by the lecturer (Dr. Hiles) and by an external examiner. In 1891 these lectures commenced, and at the close of the third year (in 1894) the first Bachelor of Music—who, by the way, was a lady—at Victoria University was created. The first external examiner for degrees—Dr. Hiles naturally being the chief—was Sir Frederick Bridge; the present holder of the office is Dr. Swinnerton Heap. These dates prove that Victoria and not Edinburgh University led the way in the matter of instruction in music.

Each year since 1894 Dr. Hiles has had the privilege of presenting to the Vice-Chancellor some graduates in music—yea, even some "sweet girl graduates." In 1898 half-a-dozen students graduated in music, and in no year have there been less than two. We understand that the conditions for the higher degree (the doctorate) have now been drawn up and are awaiting the approval of the authorities before publication. It will not be surprising if the requirements are more exacting than those of any other 'Varsity. So long ago as the year 1891 Dr. Hiles undertook to lecture for three years without any remuneration, except the two-thirds of students' fees which most professors receive in addition to a fixed stipend. This arrangement has since continued, and he has given no less than 180 lectures on music each session. But it would not be surprising if Dr. Hiles, to put it mildly, might desire that some more satisfactory conditions should attend the holding of the professorship. The fact is, Victoria University needs a General Reid, who will adequately endow the faculty of music at Manchester as that departed worthy did for Edinburgh. "Musical Manchester" has not yet risen to its responsibilities in this matter of endowment. Some wealthy citizen of Cottonopolis might very well perpetuate his memory by giving or bequeathing a sum of money to furnish Manchester—in its Victoria University—with the same musical equipment as that enjoyed, and now most worthily utilised, at Edinburgh.

The "Proceedings of the Musical Association" for the past session (the twenty-fifth) have just been issued. The object of the Association is "The investigation and discussion of subjects connected with the art and science of music." That this has been attained the subjoined contents of the volume under notice duly testify:—

"The Memorizing of Piano Music for performance"	Dr. F. G. Shinn.
"Every Staff its own Modulator"	Dr. F. J. Sawyer.
"Giovanni Pierluigi, da Palestrina"	Mr. Henry Davey.
"Music in Relation to Man and Animals"	Dr. W. J. Treutler.
"Afridi Fiddle"	Mr. D. J. Blaikley.
"Violins and Violin Manufacture from the Death of Stradivari to the Present Time"	Mr. Towry Piper.
"Brahms"	Dr. Ernest Walker.
"The Scope of Programme Music"	Mr. William Wallace.
"The Philosophy of the Higher Beauty of Music"	Mr. Joseph Goddard.

A very interesting "Addendum" to the "Proceedings" is "A complete Index to all the papers read before the Musical Association from its foundation in 1874 to the present time [1899]." This excellent Index is arranged under two divisions —I. Subjects. II. Writers. It will prove invaluable for the purposes of reference.

The Morecambe Musical Festival and Competition for 1900 has many attractive features to which we shall refer more in detail later on. But composers will be glad thus early to have their attention directed to "Class 32.—Original Composition." This is a prize of £15 for the best setting of a part-song for mixed voices, in four, five, or six parts, to a three-stanza lyric by Mr. Arthur O'Shaughnessy, entitled "A love symphony." The adjudicators are Sir John Stainer, Sir Frederick Bridge, and Dr. W. G. McNaught. We only hope that the prize-winner will be a "four-part" competitor. A generous donor has given £100 to defray the cost of a challenge shield, the temporary possession of which will be offered as a prize in the chief choral section of the competition. The secretary is Mr. H. Purcell, Musical Festival Office, Morecambe.

Mr. Dan Godfrey, Jun., sends us a prospectus of the fifth series of his Winter Symphony Concerts to be given under municipal auspices at Bournemouth. Sixty concerts will be given by a permanent orchestra of forty performers, with extra players as required. The following extracts from the prospectus testify to the enthusiasm of Mr. Dan Godfrey, Jun., and the good work he is doing for the cause of music in Bournemouth:—

> I am particularly pleased to be able to announce that the following distinguished British composers have kindly promised to conduct [gratuitously] one or more of their works during the season—viz., Sir Alexander Mackenzie (who will conduct his "Britannia" Overture and "Colomba" Ballet Music); Dr. Villiers Stanford (when I hope Mr. Leonard Borwick may be induced to come and play Dr. Stanford's Fine Variations on an Old English Theme); Messrs. Edward German (who will conduct his Rhapsody on March Themes and Symphonic Poem "Hamlet"), Hamish MacCunn (who will conduct his Ballet Music to "Diarmid"), Edward Elgar (who will conduct his Overture "Froissart," &c.), Coleridge-Taylor (who is re-writing his Symphony, and will give us the first performance), and W. H. Speer (who will conduct his music to the fairy opera "Cinderella").
> Several interesting works will be performed for the first time in England, including Tschaïkowsky's Second Symphony, Svendsen's Second Symphony; Overtures by Reinecke, Fuchs, Ignaz Brull, Reyer, &c.; the "Esclaramonde" Suite by Massenet. Attractive works by British composers will also be introduced, including a Symphony by Dr. F. E. Gladstone; Suites by Percy Pitt and Charles Hoby; Tone Picture by Edith Swepstone; and a Suite for strings, by J. Holbrook, Jun. Four new works have been composed especially for these concerts by T. Arthur Burton, consisting of a Symphonic Poem, two Overtures, and Suite for violoncello and orchestra.
> I again beg to appeal for increased support for these concerts. Everything will be done to make the performances as creditable as circumstances will allow; the rate of subscription is ridiculously low—viz., barely 8*d. per concert;* therefore I sincerely trust that the attractions set forth above will ensure the attention of all music-lovers of the Borough and district, and so secure good all-round attendances, which naturally will not only give encouragement to the orchestra and myself, but will justify the Corporation in increasing the orchestra by certain instruments which would be very desirable as permanent additions.

The original manuscript of a hitherto unknown composition by Franz Schubert—viz., a March for two pianofortes and eight performers—has, according to the Vienna Neue Musikalische Presse, recently been brought to light at Heidelberg. The manuscript had formed part of a small collection bought at an auction by a Heidelberg amateur, Herr Palme, and there can be scarcely a doubt of its genuineness. In addition to the composer's signature, it bears the date "Wien im November, 1825"—and in a corner the word "Schwammerl," the well-known nickname affectionately applied to Schubert by his Viennese friends. How many more precious autographs of the dear master may there not be still hidden away in dusty libraries and obscure corners?

The organ in the concert-room of the Royal Academy of Music, which has served its purpose more or less efficiently for the last twenty-five years, is being replaced by a larger and much more adequate instrument of three manuals built by Messrs. Henry Willis and Sons. The series of weekly lectures in the Institution will be continued during the present term. Mr. Frederick Corder will commence with a course of twelve lectures on the "History of the Opera," and he will be followed by Mr. Walter Macfarren, Mr. E. F. Jacques, Mr. William Farren, and others.

A curious monument, in the shape of an ornamental fountain, has just been unveiled at Bremen, in memory of the ancient, but now obsolete, institution of the "Stadt Pfeifer," or players of wind instruments, maintained at the expense of the Municipality. These musikers did duty at all popular festivals and on other public occasions in this and other German cities. Three of their number—a trumpeter, a hornist, and a clarinettist—in their mediæval dress, have been artistically represented by the Berlin sculptor, Max Dennert, at the base of the fountain, the cost of which has been defrayed by a music-loving Bremen citizen.

The publication will be commenced in the October number of Westermanns Deutsche Monatshefte of a number of letters written by Carl Maria von Weber to his friend, Heinrich Lichtenstein. The series, which will be published for the first time, promises to be highly interesting, as the relations of the composer of "Der Freischütz" with the Berlin scientist were of the most intimate kind. More especially in regard to the history of the composition of his principal operas and of Weber's relations with Spontini, these letters cannot fail to contain much curious and valuable information.

Frederick Chopin died in Paris, October 17, 1849. In commemoration of the fiftieth anniversary of the event a medal has been struck at Warsaw, bearing on one side an artistically executed profile of the Polish composer. On the reverse, the design represents a lyre, surrounded by a laurel branch, and having engraved upon it the opening bars of the Mazurka in A flat major. The name of the great pianoforte composer, with the dates of his birth and death, are given in the margin.

"Musical Pitch: letters, articles, and comments in the Press, on the proposal to adopt the low pitch throughout the pianoforte trade," is the title of an admirably compiled "blue book" which has been issued by Messrs. Waterlow and Sons. A capital index adds to its value as a useful book of reference.

His Majesty the King of Greece has subscribed the sum of £12,000 towards the erection in Athens of a national theatre for operatic and dramatic performances, and with a special view to the encouragement of native productions.

The Queen's Hall Promenade Concerts have been so successful that Mr. Robert Newman announces that the series will be extended to the 21st inst.

Madame Labori, the wife of Maitre Labori, the eminent advocate in the recent Dreyfus trial, is an English lady. As Miss Maggie Okey she was favourably known as a pianist, in which capacity she made successful appearances at the Crystal Palace, the Popular Concerts, the Philharmonic Society, and elsewhere.

Mr. Cuthbert Harris was successful in obtaining the degree of Doctor of Music at the recent examination held at the University of Durham. Congratulations to Dr. Cuthbert Harris upon this achievement.

Sir Alexander Mackenzie's "Astarte" Prelude ("Manfred") was performed for the first time at a special "Mackenzie" concert, and conducted by him on the 3rd ult., at New Brighton Tower. The concert, which was attended by upwards of 2,000 persons, was, like the music performed, in every way a great success.

His Majesty, King Alexander of Servia, has been pleased to confer upon Mr. August Manns the Knight Commander's Cross of his Royal Order of Saint Sava, in recognition of the service rendered by him in the development of musical art in this country.

TEWKESBURY ABBEY FESTIVAL.

The old Norman Abbey of Tewkesbury resounded with "the strain upraise of joy and praise" on the 21st ult., the occasion of its "Dedication Festival." The Worcester Festival weather found its way thither, and sunshine smiled upon the old historic town. A choral and instrumental force of nearly 300 performers was responsible for the excellent results obtained from this feast of sacred song. The band consisted of forty players from the Three Choirs district, with a sprinkling from Birmingham; the chorus was made up of seventy-seven singers from Worcester, seventy-five from Gloucester, and seventy-five from Tewkesbury—singers, be it recorded, good and true.

The Festival appropriately opened with Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise," which found a fitting environment in a venerable sanctuary possessing fine acoustical properties. The solos were in the safe keeping of Madame Ella Russell, Miss G. Morgan, and Mr. Eynon Morgan. The chorus were in their element in Mendelssohn's familiar music, and the rendering of the work reflected the highest credit upon all concerned in its interpretation.

A new anthem by the conductor of the Festival, Mr. A. Herbert Brewer, followed. It is one of the harvest festival genus and proved to be a sound and musicianly work. The anthem, which is entitled "As the earth bringeth forth her bud," opens with a short chorus in B flat followed by a vigorous Allegro (also chorus) to the words "So the Lord will cause righteousness and praise to spring forth before all nations." To this succeeds a pleasing soprano solo (6-8 time), "For the Lord shall comfort Zion." A spirited final chorus, which includes a short fugal "Hallelujah!" brings the work to a jubilant conclusion. The anthem is not only admirably constructed, but it has the merit of being within the attainments of most choirs, and, moreover, it is melodiously interesting.

Dr. Harford Lloyd's "Hymn of Thanksgiving," composed in celebration of the Queen's Jubilee, and written for the last Hereford Festival, was next performed. This was followed by a setting of the hymn "The day is past and over," a meritorious composition by Mr. S. Bath, organist of the Abbey. The evening service, conducted by Mr. Bath, included Mendelssohn's "Hear my Prayer" (Miss G. Morgan, soloist) and Sullivan's "Hail, gladdening Light."

The Festival was very ably conducted by Mr. A. Herbert Brewer, organist of Gloucester Cathedral, who is to be congratulated upon the result of his efforts towards making the Festival an undoubted success.

Worcester Cathedral.

THE WORCESTER MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

(By our Special Correspondent.)

The Festival held during the past month at Worcester was the "One Hundred and Seventy-sixth Meeting of the Three Choirs of Worcester, Hereford, and Gloucester, for the benefit of the Widows and Orphans of Clergymen of the Three Dioceses," to adopt the official designation of these annual music-makings.

The Festival began on Sunday afternoon, the 10th ult., with a "grand opening service" in the nave of the beautiful Cathedral. The service, with such resources as a full band and chorus, was one that might be expected to create a deep impression upon the three thousand or more worshippers gathered together; but one's anticipations are not always realised. The Festival band, ably led by Mr. A. Burnett, and comprising some seventy players, was an excellent body of performers, all of them absolutely "fit" for any calls that might be made upon their technical skill or artistic insight. Unfortunately the same praise cannot be meted out to the Festival chorus. In justice to the singers, however, it should be stated that they suffered from circumstances beyond their control. The conductorship of these Festivals is, and naturally so, held by the organists of the Cathedrals in which they take place; but it does not follow that, given an excellent musician and a capable organist, he should be a heaven-born conductor. Much allowance should of course be made for a young, inexperienced man in such a trying position; but unless a conductor has the combined qualifications of the suaviter in modo, fortiter in re, and, moreover, unless he is fully in touch with his singers, the result, as it unfortunately proved to be at Worcester, must be anything but satisfactory.

But to return to the service. The Magnificat and Nunc dimittis were sung to Stanford in A, and the anthems were Mendelssohn's "When Israel out of Egypt came" and "Hear my prayer," the solo in the latter work being sung by Madame Amy Sherwin. The offertory was taken during a performance of Wagner's "Kaiser-Marsch," which, though admirably played, was quite out of place on a Sunday afternoon in an English Cathedral. The sermon, preached by the Bishop of Truro (Dr. Gott), and formerly Dean of Worcester, was mainly of an aggressive "begging" character, and, from a mere layman's point of view, it hardly attained the ideal of homiletic technique. At the conclusion of the service Mr. Charles Mason played on the Cathedral organ Bach's "St. Ann's" Fugue and Mendelssohn's First Organ Sonata.

The whole of Monday was devoted to full rehearsals in the Cathedral and, for the only concert, in the Public Hall.

The "Civitas fidelis," as Charles II. designated Worcester, was favoured with brilliant sunshine on the morning of Tuesday, when nearly 3,000 people, who apparently are not tired of Mendelssohn, wended their way to the Cathedral to hear the oratorio of "Elijah." It was the largest attendance of the week (not excluding "The Messiah" morning), and the detractors of Mendelssohn are welcome to all the comfort they can find in that fact. The principal soloists were Madame Albani, Miss Ada Crossley, Mr. Edward Lloyd, and Mr. Andrew Black, all of whom satisfied every requirement, though special mention must be made of the excellent manner in which the music of the Prophet was interpreted by Mr. Andrew Black. The subordinate parts were entrusted to Madame Amy Sherwin, Mrs. Glover-Eaton, Miss Muriel Foster, Mr. W. M. Dyson, Mr. J. A. Smith, Mr. Lightowler, and Mr. G. Smith. A word of praise is due to Master John Powys Treloar, one of Dr. Sinclair's choristers at Hereford, for the admirable and unaffected manner in which he sang the music of The Youth.

Mr. C. Lee Williams, an ex-organist of Gloucester Cathedral and an ex-conductor of these Three Choirs Festivals, opened the proceedings on Tuesday evening by conducting his attractive little work "A Harvest Song." This melodious church composition, which was originally composed for a Festival at Tewkesbury Abbey in 1894, under the title of "Harvest Song of Praise," has been re-written and amplified, and thereby greatly improved, by Mr. Williams. The soloists were Madame Amy Sherwin and Miss Muriel Foster, the former of whom gave a meritorious rendering of the air "How sang the birds." In the course of the work the composer has indicated that the chorale "Now thank we all our God" "can be played by (sic) the organ only." It was therefore arranged that the Cathedral organ should discharge this duty. But the electrically-controlled instrument apparently revolted, or else "turned nasty," and so refused to sound. Perhaps it was showing a little bit of pique at being superseded by a temporary organ during the Festival performances. Anyhow, after a somewhat embarrassing pause, the chorale was ultimately played on the Festival organ. "Die Vätergruft," by Peter Cornelius, followed. It is a setting of Uhland's poem for bass soloist and a mixed chorus of sopranos, tenors, and first and second basses. Contraltos are literally not in it, and the work is sung without accompaniment of any kind. The solo was artistically interpreted by Mr. Plunket Greene, who sang it in the original German, but the chorus appeared to be singing in an unknown tongue. The appropriateness of such a composition at an English Festival is open to question. The day's music-making was brought to a close by a performance of Parts 1 and 2 of Haydn's "Creation," the soloists being Miss Esther Palliser, Mr. William Green, and Mr. Plunket Greene. It is interesting to note that the third performance in England of Haydn's genial oratorio took place at Worcester at the Three Choirs Festival of 1800. The two anterior presentations of the work were the rival performances of Ashley and Salomon, in London, in the spring of that year.

The opening strains of the Wednesday morning's performance were those of the actual novelty of the Festival—the "Solemn Prelude," for full orchestra (Op. 40), by Mr. Coleridge-Taylor, which received an admirable rendering under the composer's direction. The young Anglo-African musician has so rapidly made his mark as a composer that any new work from his pen is anticipated with eager interest. The opening theme (in B minor) justifies the title of the prelude, and the suave second subject, in the tonic major, is one of those tuneful tunes—if the expression may be permitted—that are so characteristic of Mr. Coleridge-Taylor's muse.

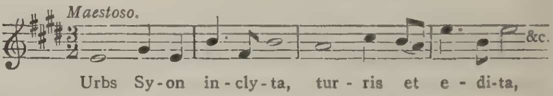
Brahms's noble "German Requiem" followed. Nowhere could the sublimities of this masterpiece be more adequately realised than within the walls of a stately sanctuary like Worcester Cathedral. The shortcomings of the performance in regard to the chorus were all too distressingly apparent. The soli parts were in the safe keeping of Miss Esther Palliser and Mr. Andrew Black. After the interval—"of one hour strictly"—the great congregation re-assembled to hear Mr. Edward Elgar's "The Light of Life" ("Lux Christi"), which was written for the last Worcester Festival, three years ago. The introduction ("Meditation") for orchestra again made itself felt by reason of its inherent beauty, and if the reflective element in the work might be considered too pronounced a feature, no one will deny the artistic sincerity of the composer in musically depicting the miracle of the blind man. Dvorák's Te Deum concluded a programme which was far too long. The soloists in Mr. Elgar's work, which was ably conducted by the composer, were Miss Esther Palliser, Miss Marie Brema, Mr. Edward Lloyd, and Mr. Andrew Black; the first and last named also took part in the Te Deum.

The only concert of the Festival took place in the Public Hall on Wednesday evening. After Smetana's "Lustspiel" Overture there came Saint-Saëns's delightful and piquantly orchestrated ballad, to Victor Hugo's words, "La Fiancée du Timbalier," which was capitally sung by Miss Marie Brema and enthusiastically applauded. Mr. Edward Elgar was heartily received when he came upon the platform to conduct his "Variations on an Original Theme." This, his latest work, was produced at a Richter concert in London, on June 19. Since then the composer has very wisely added a coda, to the great improvement of the work. The "Variations" received a first-rate rendering. The band evidently liked them as much as did the audience, and it would indeed not be surprising if the prophecy of an eminent brother-composer should come to pass—that "those 'Variations' will be heard all over the world." Mr. Plunket Greene sang "Ethiopia saluting the colours," a spirited song by Dr. Charles Wood, the words by Walt Whitman, and Sir Hubert Parry's "Anacreontic Ode," conducted by the composer. The first part of the programme was brought to a conclusion by Sir Alexander Mackenzie's breezy "Britannia" Overture, which had its usual effect of delighting the audience with its sprightly tunefulness and its irresistible humour. A Wagner selection completed the scheme.

"HORA NOVISSIMA."

Tip-toe expectation was rife on Thursday morning. The cause was not far to seek. The occasion was unique in the long, long history of these Festivals—to wit, the presence of an American composer who was to conduct his own work. No wonder therefore that a goodly company assembled themselves together in the Cathedral, and that the audience (or should it be the congregation?) proved to be the third largest of the Festival week. The composer in question was Professor Horatio W. Parker, of whom a portrait and biographical notice appeared in the September issue of The Musical Times. The work, which had its initial performance in England on this occasion, was his oratorio "Hora Novissima," which, it should be observed, was written seven years ago. The composer would doubtless admit that he has learned a good deal in those intervening seven years, and therefore the work should be judged accordingly, not that any leniency is necessary in that respect. It might, however, be just possible to find on the surface of the work opportunities for those shallow criticisms which are the stock-in-trade of the reminiscence hunter; but the more "Hora Novissima" is heard and carefully looked into, the greater do the real grit of the work and its earnest purpose manifest themselves.

Professor Parker's oratorio is a setting of a portion of "The Rhythm of Bernard de Morlaix on the Celestial Country," a famous Latin poem of about the year 1145. The poem is well-known in England through the hymns "The world is very evil," "Brief life is here our portion," "For thee, O dear, dear country," and "Jerusalem the golden." The English version of the original poem has been made by Mrs. Isabella G. Parker, the composer's mother, who, we understand, has made a special study of Latin sacred poetry. Mrs. Parker's English text, which is appended to the score, is, however, intended for elucidation rather than for actual use. The work opens with a chorus, "Hora novissima," of broad outline and melodic interest. To this succeeds a quartet, "Hic breve vivitur," in which much use is made of imitative phrases. A bass solo (in D minor) has some curious rhythmic devices, though they are so subtle as not to appear obtrusive. A chorus "Pars mea, Rex meus," contains a fugue on a melodious subject, which any choir would enjoy singing. No. 5 is a soprano solo, "O bona patria," of a tuneful and flowing character, which is followed by a quartet and chorus, "Tu sine littore," largely constructed of material from the opening chorus. This number brings the first part of the oratorio to a joyous termination. Part II. opens with a tenor solo, "Urbs Syon aurea" ("Jerusalem the golden," in the words of the hymn), having a somewhat elaborate accompaniment, to which succeeds a double chorus of remarkable vigour and constructive skill. No. 9, "Gens duce splendida," a contralto solo, is perhaps the melodic gem of the work. An archaic element in the oratorio is provided by the à capella chorus (in C), "Urbs Syon unica," in which the composer has happily seasoned the old strict "church style" with an ingredient of modern tonality. The concluding movement is a quartet and chorus, "Urbs Syon inclyta," wherein the composer gathers up his various themes and welds them together with admirable technical facility and interesting development. The opening vocal phrase of this chorus, given out by all the sopranos, may be quoted as an example of Professor Parker's melodic gift:—



Such a poem as that of Bernard of Cluny, which, by the way, does not seem to have been previously set to music, might very well tempt a composer to become mawkish and sentimental to sugariness, but Professor Parker has escaped any such seductions. He is not of that ilk. He has produced a work which is not only well worth the attention of those who are seeking for something fresh in the oratorio field, but which is a credit to himself and to the nation to which he belongs. The composer conducted an excellent performance of his oratorio. For the first time during the week the chorus were evidently on their mettle and, what is of even greater importance, they seemed to be en rapport with the conductor-composer. The soloists were Madame Albani, Miss Ada Crossley, Mr. Edward Lloyd, and Mr. Andrew Black, all of whom did their utmost to realise the intentions of the composer, who must have been gratified at the success which attended the English presentation of his "Hora Novissima."

Palestrina's "Stabat Mater," which followed, was sung from a new edition of the work which has been admirably prepared by Mr. W. Barclay Squire, who, in so doing, has been highly successful in getting a near approach to the traditional rendering of this famous church composition. The performance, however, at Worcester was not an ideal one. An extraordinary contrast to the old-world strains of Palestrina was afforded by the performance of Beethoven's Symphony in A, of which Wagner said, "This Symphony is the Apotheosis of Dance herself; it is Dance in her highest aspects, as it were the loftiest deed of bodily motion incorporated in an ideal mould of tone." Anyone who might demand an authority for such sprightly strains being permitted in a cathedral could be referred to Psalm cxlix. 3. But, apart from what is or what is not sacred music, is not Beethoven's No. 7 always a delight to the ear? The second part of another inordinately long programme was devoted to Spohr's "Last Judgment," in which the same soloists as in "Hora Novissima" took part. The duet "Forsake me not in this dread hour" was a fine display of pure vocalisation on the part of Madame Albani and Mr. Edward Lloyd — who, it should be recorded with regret, made his last appearance at a Three Choirs Festival in this work. The quartet "Blest are the departed" made its old effect—the combination of deep devotional feeling and sublime simplicity. But how few can attain unto it.

The programme of Thursday evening was of too familiar a nature to call for detailed notice. It opened with Bach's church cantata "God's time is the best" (soli by Miss Ada Crossley, Mr. William Green, and Mr. Charles Phillips), followed by Sir Hubert Parry's ever-popular "Blest Pair of Sirens"—one of the best things he has done—conducted by himself. The "Hymn of Praise" concluded the day's doings. The soloists were Madame Albani, Madame Amy Sherwin, and Mr. William Green. Special acknowledgment should be made of the admirable manner in which the exacting tenor music was interpreted by Mr. William Green—it is his just due. I had the privilege of hearing the "Hymn of Praise" in the distant Lady Chapel. There, with only the companionship of a colleague, in the shadowed solitude of that sanctuary within the Cathedral walls, I listened to the familiar strains of Mendelssohn's music. The performers were afar off and invisible, and, in the stillness of that evening hour, the music floated through the arches of the vaulted fane with a strange ethereal beauty that is beyond description.

"The Messiah," on Friday morning, concluded the Festival, except that a "grand closing service" was held in the evening of that day. The soloists in Handel's masterpiece were Madame Albani, Miss Ada Crossley, Mr. William Green, and Mr. Andrew Black; and the trumpet obbligato to "The trumpet shall sound" was played by that estimable artist, Mr. W. Morrow.

The performances throughout the week (with the exceptions above stated) were conducted by Mr. Ivor Atkins, by virtue of his office as organist of Worcester Cathedral. The duties of organist were discharged—and most capably discharged—by Mr. A. H. Brewer (of Gloucester) and Dr. Sinclair (of Hereford) at the morning and evening services respectively. A special organ for the Festival was erected by Messrs. Nicholson and Co., of Worcester. The analytical programmes, written by Mr. Herbert Thompson, of Leeds, were models of what such aids to the intelligent appreciation of music should be. The genial hospitality of the Mayor of Worcester and others in the old city must in justice to their kindness be duly acknowledged with appreciative gratitude.

A "THREE CHOIRS" SERVICE.

At five o'clock every evening during the Festival there was a service in the Cathedral, at which the Three Choirs of Gloucester, Hereford, and Worcester Cathedrals combined their forces, with highly impressive results. These services do not receive the attention they deserve in the newspaper press, probably because the critics become satiated with music at the actual Festival performances. I therefore made an effort to attend two of the services and was well rewarded. The Psalms were devotionally sung and the Glorias taken in unison with fine effect. There was an absence of that hurry-scurry, irreverent method of chanting, too often prevalent in churches, that was highly commendable. The service was Hopkins in F, which received a very adequate rendering. The anthem, "Blessed be the God and Father," by S. S. Wesley, is always a welcome feature, especially as on that occasion there was provided an opportunity of hearing a traditional rendering of that beautiful work. The solo and chorus, "Love one another," was sung more slowly than I have heard it in other "quires and places where they sing," with the result that it gained in impressiveness and devotional feeling. The solo was most feelingly sung by one of Dr. Sinclair's boys from Hereford. Dr. Sinclair, who was at the organ, made an unusually long pause on the dominant chord preceding the final chorus. The effect was good and intensified the feeling of suspense before the voices entered, as they did with excellent precision, at the words, "But the word of the Lord endureth for ever." The second anthem was Barnby's "Sweet is Thy mercy, Lord." The Precentor of Worcester (the Rev. H. H. Woodward of "Radiant morn" fame) conducted. Dr. Sinclair's organ accompaniments were irreproachable. Though modern in feeling, there was a fine artistic restraint in their unobtrusiveness that was in the highest degree praiseworthy. He did not worry his singers, nor did he adopt that stop-changing restlessness which is too often the stock-in-trade of so many organists. Dr. Sinclair's voluntary at the first service was Handel's Organ Concerto in C minor (arranged by Best), and on the second occasion he played his own arrangement of Rachmaninoff's Prelude.

The statistics of the attendances are as follows:—

Tuesday morning	("Elijah")	2,875
,, evening	("Creation," &c.)	1,553
Wednesday morning	(Brahms's Requiem, &c.)	1,821
,, evening	(Concert)	734
Thursday morning	("Hora Novissima," &c.)	2,380
,, evening	("Hymn of Praise," &c.)	1,935

SINGING BIRDS.

In the early part of the last century a great deal of attention seems to have been paid to the training of singing birds. If the instruction books of the period can be trusted, not only natural songsters, such as the thrush, blackbird, skylark, and nightingale, but even the chaffinch and sparrow were taught to whistle quite elaborate airs, with turns and flourishes worthy of a prima donna.

One of the earliest of these instruction books, written apparently about the year 1700, is still preserved in manuscript in the British Museum. It is entitled:—

> A description of all the musical birds in this kingdom, with their nature, breeding, feeding, diseases, and remedies. Also several new tunes made for birds, and may be taught them by the Cantillo or Small Flageolet. By John Hamersley.

The bulk of the book is devoted to the "breeding, feeding, diseases and remedies," and contains much curious information, as that the hedge-sparrow "lays eggs of a pale blew or sea green colour, which neatly emptied and wired yong ladies were at their ears for pendants"; or, again, of the woodlark: "for lousiness take him out of the cage and smoak him with tobacco."

When he is not dealing with practical matters of this sort, the author often displays a pretty fancy, as when he speaks of "the loud harmonious blackbird, the high-soaring lark, the sweet singing linnet, the voluntary singing redbreast and the division nightingale." At times too he bursts into poetry of a quaint, if not inspired character. Observe, for instance, the delicacy with which the sexes are discriminated in the following description of the skylark:—

> If clear the sky be and fair weather,
> This bird will sing four minutes together:
> She sings and flies up to the cloud,
> Her voice is sweet and also loud:
> He is more brisk and flyeth higher,
> To com near the celestial quire.
> Of all the birds in Noah's ark
> None sings so long as the Skylark.

From the title it might be imagined that the Cantillo was a small form of flageolet, but the following passage shows this is not the case:—

> The best way to teach birds to whistle is with a small pipe or flageolet, but it must not be too small, for most commonly the least are false, and they are so short that ther is not room for the fingers. A pipe that is between five and six inches long and the bore of it so small as the lowest note to be half a note above E la in consort pitch is a very good size and pitch. Ther is another way to teach birds to sing, and that is by a Cantillo, which is with the blade of an onion or leek, scraping the outsides of it, and the middle is a thin membrane which they put between their lips and will sing like a bird in their own natural wild notes. Some men will do it so exactly and imitate birds so much to the life, that if they were unseen, many would mistake them for singing birds.
> They must be taught in the night without any light, for then all their senses are void of their office except hearing.

Then follows, by way of introduction to the examples of bird tunes, a delightfully original metronomic direction for the benefit of such bird-fanciers as may not be musicians:—

> Two minums make a semibrief, and a semibrief is the length of the natural song of the wild chaffinch. I except the Essex chaffinch, which is longer than ours are in these parts. And 28 semibriefs is a minute of an hour.

The tunes themselves (fourteen in number) are simple four-barred strains, of which the following may serve as examples:—

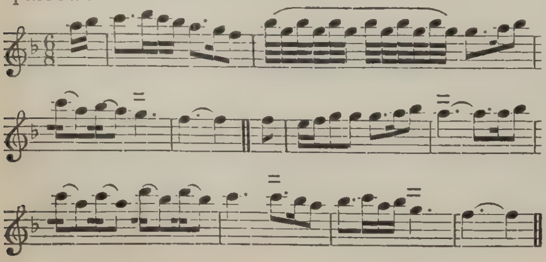
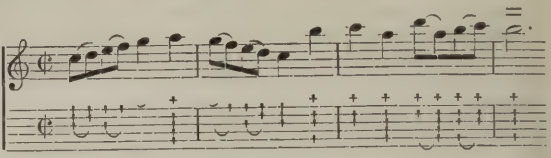
In a later book, printed by Walsh about 1720, the tunes are of a much more elaborate character, and each bird has a definite key assigned to it, C minor being given as the bullfinch key, F major as the canary bird key, and so on. The title of this book is:—

> The Bird Fancyer's Delight, or Choice Observations and Directions concerning the teaching of all sorts of Singing Birds after the Flagelet and Flute when rightly made as to size and tone, with Lessons properly compos'd within the compass and faculty of each Bird, viz.: for the Canary-Bird, Linnet, Bull-Finch, Wood-Lark, Black-Bird, Throustill, Nightingale, and Starling.

Here is the tune actually set down for the sparrow:—



and here is the opening phrase of "a proper tune for a Linnet," with the flageolet notation below:—



The flageolet notation was already being superseded by the staff, which had the great advantage of being easily readable at sight. This is pointed out in a prefatory address "to the reader," which is worth being quoted in full:—

> 'Tis still in memory, the old manner of Playing on the Flute, which was by the way of Dots, a memorial of which remains in the Gamut for that Instrument to this time, but it being so impracticable and never to be attain'd to at sight, that the use of the Instrument was almost lost, till introduc'd by the Gamut rules, which has not only brought it much in vogue, but the Performers on it are as ready at sight as on any other Instrument, 'tis not doubted but the like Improvement will be made on the Flagellet by this Method, which Instrument is not only delightfull, but also profitable, particularly to Bird Fanciers, it having been often known that Birds after being taught by the Flagellet has been sold for great value, all Lessons or Airs that are made for the Flute may now be play'd on the Flagellet, which must of Consequence be very gratefull to all Lovers of the Instrument, the improvement of which is owing to the Ingenious Mr. Hill, who has made several Incomparable Peices for the Flagellet, and is an excellent performer on it, and to encourage the Lovers of it, he is willing to instruct in this new Method, any that is desirous to learn.

In this tablature the six lines of the stave represent the six holes of the flageolet, the dots showing which of them must be stopped to produce the required note. The cross on the top line indicates that the uppermost or thumb-hole must be half stopped, the effect of this being to produce a note an octave higher than would be given if it were fully stopped. When all the holes are to be left open, a small circle is placed on the top line.

WEBER'S FUNERAL.

St. Mary's Roman Catholic Chapel, Moorfields, is about to be demolished and its site utilised for less sacred purposes. Thus another of the old, and, alas! rapidly diminishing landmarks of London possessing musical interest will soon be gone. "Change and new bricks on all around I see," was the observation of a certain divine upon beholding a crop of villainous villas which had sprung up since his last visit to a pleasant suburb, and the same may soon be said of St. Mary's, Moorfields. In the vaults of this former Pro-Cathedral of the Roman Catholic Hierarchy in London there rested for eighteen years the remains of Carl Maria von Weber. The composer of "Der Freischütz" died in Sir George Smart's house, now 103, Great Portland Street, on June 5, 1826, and he was buried, temporarily, as it subsequently proved, in the vaults of St. Mary's, Moorfields. A public funeral was immediately proposed, which was to include a performance of "Mozart's 'Requiem' upon a scale equal to the solemnity and dignity of the occasion, and to draw from the performance the means of assisting to raise a monument to the deceased." Many offers of assistance in the Requiem performance were received from the Philharmonic Society, "the entire Band of Covent Garden," and others. A committee, formed to carry out the funeral arrangements, included the names of Moscheles, Braham, Attwood, Sir George Smart, Collard, Chappell, and others. In an appeal to the public—dated "Committee Room, Argyll Rooms, June 12, 1826"—it was intimated that "the personal expenses of each mourner attending the funeral will be one pound eleven shillings and sixpence, and he will be required to furnish himself with gloves."

Owing to certain "rights of the pewholders," some unexpected difficulty arose as to holding the funeral service at Moorfields. Application was therefore made to the Dean and Chapter of St. Paul's "to grant the use of their Church, which would add so much to the magnitude, splendour, and dignity of the ceremony. The Dean received it with the utmost attention—a Chapter was called expressly—but there being no precedent for the introduction of instrumental music beyond the organ (!), nor of the performance of any music but such as it is customary to use in the funeral service of the Church of England, the authorities felt it impossible to accede to the request." But there were other reasons, one of which was that a "Requiem over the dead being a Catholic rite, could not with propriety be performed in a Protestant church."

The funeral was of a very imposing character, and attracted enormous crowds. Soon after nine o'clock on the morning of June 21, 1826, the procession moved from Sir George Smart's house in Great Portland Street, in the following order:—

Conductors on horseback.

Two Mutes, do., in silk dresses.

Plume of black ostrich feathers, borne by one Man and supported by two pages.

Two Mutes on horseback, in silk dresses.

Hearse drawn by six horses—Scutcheons—the Arms of the deceased displayed thereon.

Four Pages walked on each side.

A Mourning Coach drawn by four horses.

Pages on each side.

Then followed sixteen Mourning Coaches, with forty-two Pages.

Four Private Carriages—namely, those of Miss Stephens, Mr. Braham, Mr. J. S. Willett, and Mr. Aders—closed the procession.

Amongst the mourners were Sir George Smart, Mr. Goschen (father of the present First Lord of the Admiralty), Charles Kemble, Moscheles, J. R. Planché, Sir Henry Bishop, Braham, J. B. Cramer, Tom Cooke, Clementi, William Horsley, "Bob" Linley, Charles Neate, Cipriani Potter, William Shield, Sir J. Stevenson, T. F. Walmisley, Webbe, and others.

The funeral service was ultimately held in St. Mary's, Moorfields, in the vaults of which Weber's remains were, as it proved to be, temporarily interred. As the procession moved down the aisle of the chapel, Mozart's "Requiem" was commenced. The solo singers included Miss Cubitt (in the absence of "Kitty" Stephens) and Braham. The band was led by "Mr. Cramer," and amongst the other instrumentalists were Mori, Ella, Harper (trumpet), Smithies (trombone), and Chipp (double drums). The conductor was Mr. Attwood, "who presided at the organ, Mr. Terrail having relinquished it on this occasion." In regard to the performance of the "Requiem," a contemporary record states: "The sublimity of this fine composition combines the highest powers of the art and the solemnity of the subject with true majesty and pathos; and on this occasion so much enthusiasm and genuine feeling were mingled with the expression, that it has been seldom heard with more positive effect. At the conclusion, the body was deposited in the vault under the chapel, where some prayers in English (the Mass for the dead being in Latin) closed the ceremony of interment. Upon the coffin was the following inscription:—

Præfectus musicorum Sacelli regii
apud Regem Saxonum.
Natus urbe Eutin, inter Saxones
Die 16 Decembris, 1786.
Mortuus Londini
Die 5 Junii, 1826.
Anno quadragesimo
Ætatis suæ.

In 1844, at the instigation of Richard Wagner, the remains of Weber were removed from St. Mary's, Moorfields, and re-interred at Dresden. It may not be without interest, by way of conclusion, to give the terms of the certificate issued by the four doctors after their post-mortem examination of the great composer who drew his last breath in London.

> "On opening the body of C. M. von Weber, we found an ulcer on the left side of the larynx; the lungs almost universally diseased, filled with tubercles, of which many were in a state of suppuration, with two voomicæ—one about the size of a common egg, the other smaller, which was a quite sufficient cause of his death."

CHURCH MUSIC.

The music for the Church Congress so close at hand will, this year, be of special interest. From a practical point of view the arrangements could hardly be improved. The subjects for the lectures follow each other in an admirably conceived sequence. Sir C. Hubert Parry deals with "The Essentials of Church Music"; Sir George Martin will instruct churchmen concerning "The training of Choirmasters" (not of "Choristers," as inadvertently stated in our last issue); Dr. A. Madeley Richardson will discourse on the subject of "Voice production in Choir Training," and Canon Rhodes Bristow on "Ancient Plain-Song." The London Church Choir Association and the Gregorian Association, forming a choir of some 2,000 voices, will undertake the performance of the musical illustrations. Possibly there may be some diversity of opinion as to the advantages of having so enormous a choir as this. Some would doubtless rather hear a choir of experienced singers from our best Cathedral choirs. However, there can be no doubt with regard to the high character of the rendering of the chosen music, and some remarkably impressive effects may be expected.

The address to be given in Westminster Abbey by the Bishop of Richmond will be musically illustrated by a remarkably fine series of anthems of the periods of English Church music with which the Bishop proposes to deal. These are Tallis's "If ye love me," one of the most exquisite gems to be found in the whole range of Church music, and Byrd's "Bow thine ear," these representing the sixteenth century; Gibbons's noble "Hosanna" and Purcell's fine "Praise the Lord, O my soul," will illustrate the English Church music of the seventeenth century; the eighteenth century will be duly acknowledged by so good a selection as Croft's "Praise the Lord" and Greene's "God is our hope"; and the nineteenth century, so soon to pass away, will be worthily placed before the listeners by Goss's "If we believe," "How lovely are Thy habitations," composed by Charles Salaman, and S. S. Wesley's "The Wilderness." The Abbey choir will sing this fine and representative selection, under the experienced direction of Sir Frederick Bridge.

Recently, at St. Michael's, Lower Sydenham, musical services were given which included a selection from the "Hymn of Praise." Upon one occasion the organist, Mr. Ernest Foster, played the symphony to the "Lobgesang." The special service at the Parish Church, Portsmouth, on the 3rd ult., included such excellent anthems as Attwood's "They that go down to the sea in ships" and Wesley's "Blessed be the God and Father"; and the organist, Mr. R. H. Turner, played Bach's Prelude and Fugue in D major.

ORGAN MUSIC.

It was a well conceived idea to arrange for a series of organ recitals upon the magnificent organ at the Royal Albert Hall, as preludes to the meetings of the Church Congress to be held in that building. The phrase "before the meetings," however, gives one an uncomfortable feeling of a kind of consent to making music a "doormat," which people, more or less, heedlessly step on or step over, with their expectations fixed upon the "good things" to follow. Why not count the recitals as among the "good things," and so place music and its excellent representatives in a more dignified attitude by announcing that the meetings will commence with organ recitals? However, let us be thankful that upon these occasions organ recitals will be given—another advance which will signalise this year's Congress, and which is not possible every year.

Mr. Roger Ascham's organ recital at Feather Market Hall, Port Elizabeth, on August 13, included such effective works as Handel's Organ Concerto in F (known as the "Cuckoo and Nightingale" Concerto), one of Smart's Andante movements, and Dubois's "Fiat Lux." At Brisbane, Mr. George Sampson recently gave an interesting selection on the Exhibition organ, including Mendelssohn's Fourth Organ Sonata and Hesse's Toccata in A flat. The interest taken by the good people of Brisbane in the series of recitals has been gratifying. The recital under notice had a plebiscite programme, and it appears that out of eighty-four pieces played during the present series of recitals, eighty-one were repeated by an aggregate of no less than 902 votes. Further, judgment was given in favour of certain specimens of Mendelssohn's work, commanding 107 votes, against eighty-four for Handel and sixty-two for Bach. This looks like present progress and future promise. The voting, it should be further noted, secured the repetition of some of Guilmant's best organ pieces. The average attendance, it seems, has been 800. There is a decided touch of practical enterprise in the announcement on the programme that special cars will run an hour before the performances commence, and that "the car conductors will issue tickets covering the fare and admission to the recital."

Mr. George Rathbone lately gave a recital at Cartmel Priory Church, when Rheinberger's Sonata in F minor, Elgar's "Lux Christi" Prelude, and the Adagio from Widor's Sixth Organ Symphony were features of a very good scheme. At the Parish Church, Scunthorpe, Mr. B. G. Thorne lately gave a recital including "Meditation in a Cathedral," Silas; Sonata in E minor, Rheinberger; Prelude and Fugue in E minor, Bach; and a Melody and Postlude from Mr. Thorne's own pen.

The organ at the Liverpool Cathedral, having been satisfactorily rebuilt, has been re-opened by Mr. Burstall, the Cathedral organist. The work was carried out by Messrs. Rushforth and Son.

At the Royal Duchess Theatre, Balham, the management, as will be remembered by our readers, has secured a two-manual organ, constructed on the tubular pneumatic principle by Mr. Eustace Ingram. Though organs have long since become necessary adjuncts of the opera orchestra, their presence in ordinary theatres has been uncommon; one can recall two or three only in London as in use, and these belong to days long past. These instruments were at the Princess's, Adelphi, and the Alhambra. In these days of travelling operatic companies, organs are becoming necessary as articles of theatrical equipment, and the management of the Balham Theatre has done well to lead the way.

It may be mentioned that in Mr. Tree's revival of "King John," at Her Majesty's Theatre, organ music is brought into some prominence, and we understand that a few days before the performance the enterprising manager had a new pipe organ erected for the production.

An extensive scheme of recitals by Mr. Herbert Walton, at Glasgow Cathedral, will be welcome to music-lovers in that city, and go to show that the "good seed" sown by Dr. A. L. Peace during his residence in Glasgow has naturally borne good fruit. Mr. Walton's programmes during the past month have included organ music by Bach, Lemmens, and S. S. Wesley, with Mr. Tertius Noble's excellent Theme with variations and Dr. Basil Harwood's "Dithyramb."

Mr. F. Gostelow has recently given a series of recitals at Luton Parish Church, the Primitive Methodist Church in the same town, at Marlowes Baptist Church, Hemel Hempstead, and at the Alexandra Palace. His programmes have included A. Hollins's Overture in C minor, Dr. Varley Roberts's "Bell" Voluntary, Wolstenholme's "Le Carillon," Nocturne and Reverie in F, by R. Driffil; Meditation and Toccata, by E. d'Evry; and an Introduction and Fugue from his own pen.

Mr. H. Weston gave a recital at St. Peter's Presbyterian Church, Upper Tooting, on the 8th ult., his programme including Sir R. P. Stewart's delightful Concert Fantasia in D, Best's Concert Fantasia on a theme by Rode, and Overture in D by J. Kinross. At St. Seiriol's, Penmaenmawr, Dr. W. J. Reynolds played a recital on the 12th ult., the scheme of which included Fantasia in A minor, Lemmens, and Schumann's fine Fugue (No. 6) on the name of Bach. Mr. R. E. Parker's programme at Wilmslow Parish Church, on a recent occasion, included Dr. A. L. Peace's admirable "Sonata da Camera" (No. 1). Mr. E. H. Smith gave a recital at St. Bede's, Liverpool, on the 10th ult., his list of pieces including Offertoire in D flat, Salomé, and Wedding March, Best. Mr. Roger Ascham's recital programme at St. John's Wesleyan Church, Port Elizabeth, recently given, included Dr. E. T. Chipp's Andante con moto in F sharp minor and Dr. E. J. Hopkins's "Dolce Cantabile."

Messrs. Hope-Jones and Company have built a new organ for All Saints', Upper Norwood. The scheme, when complete, will include great, swell, echo, solo, and pedal organs. There is a large number of mechanisms well contrived and arranged for the convenience of the performer.

The new organ at the United Methodist Free Church, Middlesbrough (built by Messrs. Forster and Andrews), was opened on Sunday, the 24th ult., by Mr. W. J. Stobbart, who gave recitals in the afternoon and after the evening service on that day, and again on the evening of the 27th ult.

Mr. H. A. Fricker has continued successfully his recitals at the Town Hall, Leeds, on Tuesday afternoons and Saturday evenings during last month.

THE COMING SEASON.

The spell of silence in musical London was broken by Mr. Robert Newman's Promenade Concerts at Queen's Hall (with Mr. Henry J. Wood as conductor), on August 26; followed by a revival of the Promenade Concerts at Covent Garden, on the 2nd ult., under the direction of Mr. Cecil Barth. The latter (conducted by Mr. George Riseley and Herr Jacobi) came to the end of their brief existence on the 16th ult.; the former have been so successful that Mr. Newman has resolved on their extension till the 21st inst. The early announcements of entrepreneurs and societies are as follows:—

The Royal Albert Hall.

The programme of our leading choral society comprises eight concerts—one of these only, "The Messiah," on Good Friday, not being included in the Subscription. The series will commence on November 10 with "Elijah." On December 7, "The Golden Legend" will be given, preceded by a setting, for chorus and orchestra, of Rudyard Kipling's stirring "Ballad of the Clampherdown," by Sir Frederick Bridge. "The Messiah" will be performed, as usual, on New Year's Day, "St. Paul" on January 25, and "The Redemption" on Ash Wednesday. The chief novelty of the season is due on March 22, when Mr. Coleridge-Taylor's setting of scenes from Longfellow's "Hiawatha" will be performed. The scenes include: 1, "Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast" (which has already achieved a widespread popularity), preceded by the Overture, written for the approaching Norwich Festival; 2, "The Death of Minnehaha," written for the North Staffordshire Festival at the end of this month; 3, "Hiawatha's Departure." The last scene is composed expressly for this performance. The season will conclude with a Wagner Concert on May 3. Sir Frederick Bridge will, of course, conduct. Madame Melba's Concert, under the direction of Mr. Vert, will take place on November 4.

Queen's Hall.

The Saturday Symphony Concerts (afternoon) will be resumed on the 28th inst., and will be continued every fortnight up to March 10, with the exception of an interval from December 9 to January 27; Wagner Concerts (evening) will be given on November 13, 20, 27, and December 4. Both series will be conducted by Mr. Henry J. Wood. There will also be Concerts on Christmas Day, Ash Wednesday, and Good Friday, and on St. Andrew's and St. Patrick's Days. Finally, Mr. Newman announces his second Musical Festival from April 30 to May 5. The Richter Concerts, under Mr. Vert's management, will take place on the 23rd and 30th inst., and November 6.

St. James's Hall.

The Saturday Popular Concerts will be resumed on November 11 and continue till December 17; after the customary interval they will be resumed from January 16 till April 7. As last year, only seven Monday Popular Concerts will be given, from February 26 to April 9. The first of the Ballad Concerts given at this Hall will take place on November 1. A number of Recitals and Concerts by individual artists are also announced.

Crystal Palace.

The Saturday Concerts (forty-fourth series) will commence on the 7th inst. and continue each week till November 11. The Symphonies announced are Mozart's in E flat, Beethoven's No. 2 in D, Schubert's "Unfinished," Schumann's No. 1 in B flat, and Goetz's in F; and among the works to be given for the first time at the Crystal Palace are Saint-Saëns's "Samson and Delilah," Dvorák's Symphonic Poem "Heldenlied," Professor Stanford's Choral Song "Our enemies have fallen" (chorus and orchestra), Edward Elgar's Scène Espagnole "Sevillaña," Siegfried's "Rheinfahrt," from the "Götterdämmerung," and Valse Fantasia (for flute and orchestra) by Thomas Dunhill. The first performance in England is also announced of Benjamin Godard's Concerto for violin and orchestra (No. 2) in G minor. Beethoven's Choral Fantasia will also be given. Altogether an attractive set of programmes.

At Steinway Hall the Elderhorst Chamber Concerts will begin on the 23rd inst., and be continued weekly till December 11. Mr. Clifford Harrison will give his usual Autumn course of ten Recitals with music, the first being announced for the 30th ult.

At St. George's Hall Mr. Charles Fry's annual series of Costume Recitals with music will be given, on the 7th, 14th, and 21st inst.; and Signor Clerici will give two performances of his opera "Lorraine" later in the month.

Suburban Choral Societies.

The Highbury Philharmonic Society's twenty-second season will comprise four Concerts. On December 5, Sullivan's "Martyr of Antioch" and Coleridge-Taylor's "Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast" will be given. On January 23, Mendelssohn's "Loreley" and another work not yet selected. On March 6, "Elijah," and on May 8, Mackenzie's "The Dream of Jubal" and "Acis and Galatea." Conductor, Mr. Betjemann.

The Finsbury Choral Association will give three Concerts. "Berlioz's" Faust, on November 23; Mendelssohn's 115th Psalm and Schumann's "Paradise and the Peri," on February 22; and Sullivan's "Light of the World," on April 26. Conductor, Mr. F. Cunningham Woods.

The People's Palace Choral Society announces five Concerts, under the direction of Mr. C. H. Allen Gill. These will include "Elijah" (on the 21st inst.), "Messiah," Coleridge-Taylor's "Hiawatha" and "Death of Minnehaha," Gounod's "Faust," and Mackenzie's "Dream of Jubal."

The South London Choral Association will perform the following works during the season: Mendelssohn's "Elijah," on November 29; Beethoven's "Ruins of Athens," Coleridge-Taylor's "Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast," Haydn's Mass in B flat, and Mendelssohn's "Athalie." There will also be two Concerts of vocal and orchestral selections, and a Violin Recital, under the direction of Mr. T. E. Gatehouse.

The Bow and Bromley Choir, under Dr. W. G. McNaught, will perform "Samson," the "Creation," Parry's "Blest Pair of Sirens," Stanford's "Phaudrig Crohoore," Coleridge-Taylor's "Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast," and, probably, "The Spectre's Bride" (Dvorák).

The Bermondsey Settlement Choral and Orchestral Union will give seven Concerts during the season at various places, commencing on November 23, at Bermondsey Town Hall. The works set down for performance are: Mendelssohn's "Athalie," Beethoven's Symphony, No. 5, in C minor, Coleridge-Taylor's "Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast," Spohr's "Last Judgment," Mendelssohn's "St. Paul," Cowen's "Rose Maiden," Stainer's "Crucifixion," "The Messiah," and Sullivan's "Golden Legend." Mr. John E. Borland is the conductor.

The Gravesend and Milton Choral Association, in the prospectus for its twenty-second series, announces four Concerts, to take place on the 24th inst., December 6, February 27, and April 29. The works to be performed are Mendelssohn's "Loreley," Haydn's "Creation," and Sullivan's "Golden Legend," with a miscellaneous concert.

NOVELTIES AT THE QUEEN'S HALL PROMENADE CONCERTS.

Lovers of novelty have been well catered for by Mr. Robert Newman at his fifth season of Promenade Concerts at the Queen's Hall. The high standard of the orchestral playing, under the conductorship of Mr. Henry J. Wood, has been fully maintained. Few alterations were deemed necessary in the personnel of the band this year, and it would be impossible to collect a more capable body of instrumentalists than that over which Mr. Wood so successfully presides.

The first novelty, M. Anatole Liadoff's "Valse Badinage," was included in the programme of the opening night, August 26. It is a cleverly scored little piece for piccolo, two flutes, three clarinets, harp, and celesta, an unusual combination, apparently adopted by the composer's expressed desire to imitate the sounds of a musical box. This being the aim of the piece, it will be gathered that its value is only that of a jeu d'ésprit, but as such it is bright and not without humour. It may be added that

M. Liadoff was born at St. Petersburg in 1855 and is chiefly known by his fanciful and tasteful pieces for the pianoforte.

Tschaïkowsky's "Suite Caracteristique," which was played for the first time in England on the 2nd ult., was originally produced at one of the concerts given by the Moscow Musical Society in 1883, shortly after the production of the composer's opera "Mazeppa." It may therefore be said to have been written at a period when the composer's genius was in its maturity, and this assumption is supported by the command shown of contrapuntal resource and the brilliancy of the scoring. The most elaborated number is the opening movement, entitled "Jeu des sons." The next number is a Waltz, melodious and graceful in character. The Scherzo Burlesque which follows is full of life and possesses considerable humour. The fourth number, called "Rêves d'enfant," is based upon a beautiful theme of Schumannesque character, and the elaboration of what may be termed the ornamental passages is very remarkable. The Finale is a "Danse baroque," and is the most typical of the Russian school.

Saint-Saëns's "Prelude and Cortège" to M. Louis Gallet's tragedy "Dejanire" is somewhat pretentious, but it makes an effective concert-room piece and seemed to be much approved on its performance on the 5th ult. The composer has himself described the style of the music as "a compromise between that of antiquity and modern time," and this is apparent in the opening of the prelude, which begins in the ancient Greek Phrygian mode, while the final bars are in our modern major scale.

The "Five Flemish Dances" by Jan Blockx, heard on the 6th ult., are said to be based upon folk-tunes, and their direct and simple character certainly supports this statement. The dances are severally an Allegretto in D, Scherzo in F, Un poco maestoso in C, second Scherzo in F, and Tempo risoluto in D. They are all delightfully rhythmic, are scored in a finished manner, and are not only melodious, but show a sense of humour, this being specially noticeable in the third dance. As the composer is little known in this country, it may be added that he was born at Antwerp in 1851, and that his works include three operas, "Maître Martin," "Herbergsprincess," and "Jetsvergeten."

The "Caucasian Sketches," by M. Ippolitoff Ivanoff, produced on the 7th ult., consist of four movements, severally headed, "In the ravine," "In the nomad camp," "In the Mosque," and "The Sirdar's procession." These are partly based upon melodies heard by the composer during a visit to the Caucasus, and some of them are full of national character. The music is poetically conceived and picturesquely scored, and the work in its entirety left a pleasing impression.

A work of more musical importance was presented on the following night, the 8th ult. This was Alexander Glazounoff's Fantasia for orchestra (Op. 53). The score is dated "Petersburgh, 1894." No programme is connected with the music, but it is sufficiently suggestive to stimulate the imagination of the listener. The themes are good and they are treated in masterly manner, and altogether the work is worthy of the pen of this talented and accomplished composer.

The Air de Ballet by Mr. Percy Pitt, which was heard for the first time on the 9th ult., is an arrangement for strings of a movement from an early set of pieces entitled Bagatelles, and was originally written for violin and pianoforte. It is an unpretentious but expressive little piece and it pleased very greatly.

The "Casatschok," which was included in the same programme as the above, is a vigorous example of the Russian national dance. Its composer, M. Nicolas de Wolkoff, who is scarcely known in England, was born in 1825, at Moscow. He was an intimate friend of the brothers Anton and Nicolas Rubinstein, and was associated with the latter in founding the Moscow Conservatoire. On the Continent he is greatly esteemed as a pianist and is the composer of attractive songs and pianoforte pieces.

The symphonic poem "Ave Libertas!" (Op. 18), by Miguéz, was written to celebrate the first anniversary of the proclamation of the Republic in the United States of Brazil. The work, however, cannot be said to reflect lustre on that occasion.

Far more pleasing was the first performance in England, on the 14th ult., of a Symphony in C (Op. 1, No. 3), by Michael Haydn, the younger brother of the great Joseph. This work was found a few years ago by the musical director of the Benedictine Abbey of Kremsmünster. The date of the work is stated to be 1784. It comprises three movements, an Allegro spirituoso, Rondo (un poco Adagio), and Finale (Fugato), all of which are full of facile melody and geniality.

A symphonic poem of somewhat pretentious character, entitled "Asgardsreien," by Ole Olsen, was introduced on the 16th ult. It is programme music of the most pronounced type, and the incident which the composer has sought to illustrate is the "lifting" by the gods into Walhalla of two strangers who have disturbed some wedding festivities. This permits strains of diverse character, but the themes possess little character and less charm, and as music the work has small value.

The same evening an entr'acte, entitled "Slumber Song," by Mr. W. H. Squire, was heard for the first time. This proved to be an extremely dainty and charming little piece.

A new concert-overture, entitled "As you like it," by Mr. Clarence Lucas, was produced on the 20th ult. As in his "Othello" Overture, Mr. Lucas has wisely confined himself to illustrating the elements of the story, and the themes seek to suggest Orlando's youthful exuberance and passion, the humours of Touchstone, and the gentle and tender, and playful and capricious sides of Rosalind's character. Picturesque scoring and imitations of old English dance rhythms form an appropriate pastoral setting. The music makes little pretension. The composer's aims are clearly discernible, whatever is striven for is gained, and, apart from its associations, the music is expressive and pleasing.

The "Poème Vergilien," entitled "Eglogue," by M. Henry Rebaud, one of the most promising of young French composers, is an extremely poetical and delicate little piece. It is headed by some well-known lines from Virgil's "Bucolics," and these immortal pastorals have presumably inspired M. Rebaud; hence the title.

The latest novelty we are able to notice in these columns was heard on the 22nd ult., and was the Overture to Tschaïkowsky's opera in four acts, entitled "Les Caprices d'Oxane," which was produced in Moscow in 1886. The overture, as regards form, differs little from that of classic writers, although its sections are respectively headed Andante con moto, Andante, Allegro giusto, Andante, and Allegro vivace. The first two slow portions serve as an introduction to the third section, which forms the bulk of the overture. The themes are essentially Russian in character, and their nationality is emphasised by the boldness of the harmonic changes and the picturesqueness of the orchestration. The barbaric element is very pronounced, but it cannot be said that the music left a favourable impression on its first hearing by English ears.

Some first appearances should be recorded. Notably that of Master Paul Bazelaire, who was born at Sedan in 1887, and who is undoubtedly gifted with great musical aptitude. He made his début in England on the 7th ult., and by the expressiveness of his violoncello playing at once gained the public ear.

Mdlle. Carrozi, a harpist of great ability, whom Mr. Newman has engaged for his orchestra, played her first harp solo at the Queen's Hall, on the 1st ult., and proved herself to be an interesting player. Mdlle. Tosta de Benici, a Swedish pianist, appeared for the first time in England on the 6th ult., and created a very favourable impression by reason of her intelligent and legitimate style. Miss Yvonne de Treville, an American soprano, made so successful a début on August 28 that she will probably visit these shores again.

COVENT GARDEN PROMENADE CONCERTS.

Under the joint-conductorship of Mr. George Riseley and M. Georges Jacobi, a series of promenade concerts was commenced on the 2nd ult., at Covent Garden Theatre, on the lines of those given in 1893 and previous years. On the opening night, Mr. W. H. Cummings conducted his "Festal March," and, on the 7th ult.,

Mr. Edward Elgar directed a performance of his "Three Bavarian Dances," and the inspiring "Song of the Sword," from his "Caractacus," was sung by Mr. Charles Phillips.

The following evening Mr. Coleridge-Taylor took up the baton, and his "Four Characteristic Waltzes" and "Danse Nègre" were played, and excited enthusiastic applause. The waltzes deserve to be often heard in our concert rooms, for they are light music of the best class, full of life, grace, and sentiment, and charmingly scored. It may be added that they have been transcribed in various forms for home use. The "Danse Nègre" possesses a quaintness and wilfulness that at once captivates the listener.

The first appearance in London, on the 9th ult., of Mr. Charles Saunders, a promising young tenor, may be recorded. A week later the concerts were discontinued.

WESTERN CONVENTION OF CHOIRMASTERS AND TEACHERS.

On the 14th ult. and two following days the Western Convention of Choirmasters and Music Teachers was held in the Lecture Theatre of the Museum and Library, Bristol. The sittings were well attended, and the proceedings created much interest. At the opening meeting Mr. J. S. Curwen presided and delivered an address on the "Mission of Music." Mr. Filmer Rook (London) spoke on "Breathing and Resonance," and a brief discussion followed, and then the Society of Bristol Gleemen, under the direction of Mr. W. J. Kidner, sang several pieces which were heartily applauded.

On the morning of the 15th ult. Mr. W. J. Kidner took the chair. A paper was read by Mr. B. Mansell Ramsey (Bournemouth) on "Music in Ladies' Schools." He considered there was a temptation to force the powers of girls, especially when a school concert was on the tapis. In regard to singing, he said that purity of tone must never be sacrificed to power. The aim of the teacher should be to develop the middle part of the voice. Further, the teacher should desire to awaken interest, instead of enthusiasm, as the former had much more staying power than the latter. He urged that girls should be made to cultivate their musical memories.

Mr. Harry Evans (Cefn Coed) read a short paper on "Music in Wales." He said that Wales was called a land of song, but whether the people were really musical was a debatable question. What they sadly lacked was technique and finish, a fact which purely Welsh people were slow to believe. The weak spot in their choirs was reading at sight. The learning by heart, which took a great deal of time, was responsible for the splendid attack noticeable in their choral competitions. He thought the remedy for the lack of readers lay in the teaching in elementary schools. Regarding instrumental music, great progress on the whole had been made in pianoforte playing, but much injury was done by bogus examining bodies. A good deal might be accomplished by Eisteddfodau in encouraging students to take up the theoretical study of the art.

Mr. Arthur H. Peppin (music-master of Clifton College) read a paper on "Public School Music." He believed that music suffered under two disadvantages in a school: first, only a small proportion of the boys took it up, and, next, each individual boy required special attention. During recent years more attention had been devoted to the physical development of school boys, and much time must be devoted to fresh air and exercise, and one of the conditions of most outdoor sports was that they must be shared by a number of lads collectively. Hence it became obviously undesirable to take boys away from the games that the others of their form or house were engaged in. It would render music unpopular to make them have music when they should be at play with their fellows. Once let the notion get about that music was, as a boy would say, "beastly rot," and the difficulties would be increased threefold. It followed that those responsible for music in a large school should possess great tact. Music-masters must cultivate a sympathetic insight into the characters of the boys to make the art attractive to the pupils and the school generally.

At the evening meeting Mr. J. L. Roeckel presided. Mrs. Emil Behnke (London) contributed a paper with illustrations on "Suggestions for prevention of vocal trouble to professional voice users," after which Mr. L. C. Venables gave an address on "The teaching of time in both notations," illustrating his observations by means of diagrams thrown upon a screen. In a paper on "The voice, with a few words on choir training," Mr. D. W. Rootham (conductor of the Bristol Madrigal Society) said, in regard to the practical part of articulation, reading aloud was one of the best helps. He knew of many cases where it had not only done good to an individual, but it had shown to others how much could be gained in declamatory singing by having the throat as well as the mouth open. The Rev. U. R. Thomas (chairman of the Bristol School Board) presided at the morning sitting on the 16th ult. He said music was the fragrance of the flower to school life, and the more they could get it cultivated by those who taught and those who learned, the better would it be for the schools and the country. Mr. W. J. Kidner read a paper on "The musical training of pupil teachers," and Dr. W. G. McNaught delivered an address on "The necessity of economising time in teaching sight singing, &c.," which was followed by an illustrative lesson which Dr. McNaught gave to a class of boys and girls from the Anglesea Place School, Bristol. At the final sitting, in the afternoon, Mr. A. N. Price (one of the committee of the Bristol Festival) was chairman. Mr. Edward Cook (organist, St. Paul's, Clifton) read a paper on "Tonic Sol-fa in the Church of England," Mr. J. A. Curtis (London) gave an address on "Music in the Sunday School," and Mr. F. Peake (Southampton) one on "Bands in Elementary Schools."

REVIEWS.

Cathedral Organists, Past and Present. A Record of the Succession of Organists of the Cathedrals, Chapels Royal, and principal Collegiate Churches of the United Kingdom, from about the period of the Reformation to the present day. By John E. West.

[Novello and Company, Limited.]

Such information as that contained in the book before us has never yet been published between two covers. The late Mr. John Bishop, of Cheltenham, one of our most accomplished musical antiquaries, made, we believe, large MS. collections for a work of this nature, but never printed the result of his researches. Mr. West, therefore, comes before us upon quite untrodden ground. We have hitherto looked upon the compiler as a delightful composer for the Church: he now appears as a zealous and painstaking chronicler of her "chief musicians." Prefaces to books are, in nine cases out of ten, voted dry and uninteresting, and are usually skipped by the majority of readers. This plan must not, however, be adopted with Mr. West's volume, for he has contrived to render it a most interesting portion of his work. He very properly points out the difference between the Cathedrals of the Old and New Foundations, and tells us how the status and duties of the organist varied in each. At certain Cathedrals circumstances seem to have precluded the possibility of tracing a complete succession of the organists—Bristol, for instance. Here the library containing the Cathedral records and registers was sacked and burnt by the rioters in 1831. At Llandaff there was no organ or choral service from 1691 until the re-opening of the Cathedral after its restoration by Messrs. Pritchard and Seddon in 1861. Consequently no organists were appointed between these dates.

The book is richly interspersed with anecdotes, several of which have never before appeared in print. Some of them will assuredly make the present sober generation of cathedral-goers gasp and stare; others will provoke a hearty laugh, for there is a humorous side to everything. We cull a few specimens. At Bangor, in 1784, William Shrubsole, composer of the well-known tune "Miles's Lane," was dismissed for "frequenting conventicles." The famous lawsuit brought against the Dean and Chapter of the same Cathedral by the organist, Dr. Pring, in 1813, for the recovery of certain tithes belonging to the maintenance of the choir, is, we are glad to observe, touched upon. At Canterbury, in 1825, "German pedals" were added to the organ. Old Highmore Skeats, the then organist, had a great aversion to them and would not use them, saying to his pupil, Jones, whenever anyone asked to hear them, "Here, Jones, come and show these things off. I never learnt to dance." At Gloucester, in 1688, Stephen Jeffries was dismissed because he, on a certain Thanksgiving day, "immediately after the sermon ended and the blessing given, played over upon the organ a common ballad in the hearing of 1,500 or 2,000 people . . . . . insomuch that the young gentlewomen invited one another to dance." At Lincoln, in 1611, Thomas Kingston was arraigned before the Chapter "for beating the boys and calling Mr. Dye, the master of the choristers, an ass"! Mudd, one of his successors in the organistship, seems to have been a very objectionable person. "Mr. Mudd hath been so debauched these assizes" (wrote the Precentor to the Dean on March 14, $166\frac{2}{3}$), "and hath so abused Mr. Derby [an organ-builder then engaged on some repairs to the organ] that he will hardly be persuaded to stay to finish his worke unlesse Mudd bee removed. And I have stuck in the same Mudd too; for he hath abused mee above hope of pardon. I wish you would be pleased to send us downe an able and more civill organist."

We are glad to observe that Mr. West furnishes the right date of the suicide of poor "Jerry" Clark, the first organist of new St. Paul's Cathedral. It was December 1, 1707. Being disappointed in love, he determined to destroy himself. Riding into the country and alighting from his horse, he went into a field, in a corner of which were a pond and some trees, when he began a debate in his mind whether he should end his days by hanging or by drowning. Not being able to resolve the knotty question, he left it to the decision of chance, and tossed up a halfpenny; but the coin, falling on some clay, stuck sideways. Though the decree of chance did not answer his expectations, still it seemed to ordain that neither hanging nor drowning was advisable. He therefore quietly remounted his horse, rode to London, and blew out his brains with a "screw pistol." A little more than a century later Robert Cooke, the organist of Westminster Abbey, also committed suicide in consequence of a love affair. He was missing on August 22, 1814, and was found in the Thames near Millbank on the 23rd. Mr. West does not give these details.

John Jones, who was organist of St. Paul's from 1755 to 1796, appears not to have been worthy of the situation, for he was not capable of doing the duty for a length of time after his appointment; and, as he could not play from score, he employed himself in arranging services and anthems in two lines. Attwood, his successor, whose character was as amiable as his music, used to say, with reference to the dignitaries of St. Paul's and his appointment there, "It is all very well that they agree to pay me for playing, for if they did not, I should be happy to pay them for letting me play."

When Ralph Banks was appointed to Rochester Cathedral in 1790, he found that only one lay-clerk attended during each week. The daily service was not chanted. Two "Services"—Aldrich in G and Rogers in D—and seven anthems had been sung in rotation on Sundays for twelve years. The minor canons, too, did not chant. Banks, who was originally a chorister of Durham and assistant to Ebdon the organist there, brought with him to Rochester the traditions of what was then the best regulated choir in the kingdom, and did his best to remedy this disgraceful state of things. Thomas Pitt, organist of Worcester from 1793 to 1806, had a refractory lay-clerk named Griffiths to deal with. It is related that on one occasion he took offence at Pitt's accompaniment to one of his solos, and, being a man of eccentric manners, he surprised the choir and congregation by slamming his book and shouting "Pitt's wrong, Pitt's wrong!" Mr. West might have added that this same Griffiths was a violent Protestant, and once, on July 1, the commemoration of the battle of the Boyne, came into choir with huge orange-coloured ribbons in his shoes. Having been warned by the Dean to pay more respect to his superiors and say "Sir" in addressing them, on one occasion when the Dean only was present and said the service, in repeating the petitions in the Lord's Prayer, Griffiths concluded each with the monosyllable which had hurt his dignity.

The temptation to quote further from these anecdotes is great, but space forbids. The book is arranged upon a clear and uniform plan, the Cathedrals being placed in alphabetical order. The earliest appointment traceable seems to be that of John Ingleton, at Lincoln, in 1439, though we find "Adam, the organist," mentioned at Norwich a century earlier. Then comes Wells, with Richard Hugo, in 1487. Appended to the name of each organist is a succinct notice of his life, appointments, and compositions. When known, the place of burial is invariably given and Mr. West has got together a goodly collection of epitaphs. Special mention may be made of those on the graves of Pring (Bangor), Brimlei (Durham), Loosemore, the organ-builder (Exeter), Tomkins (Old St. Paul's), Meredith (New College, Oxford), Inglott (Norwich), Kirby (York), Childe (Windsor), Aylward (Windsor), Orlando Gibbons (Canterbury), Purcell (Westminster), and Arnold (Westminster). The last-named by the Doctor's son, S. J. Arnold (author of the words of "The Death of Nelson"), we never remember to have seen before in print. We are glad to notice that Mr. West has quoted the sonnet by Charles Crocker, a former well-known verger of Chichester, occasioned by the finding of the gravestone of Thomas Kelway during some repairs in the South Aisle of that Cathedral. Crocker was a remarkable man. Self-educated, he came before the public in 1830, in a volume of poems, wonderful for one whose training was all his own. Southey once declared that his sonnet "The Oak" was one of the finest in the language.

Several hitherto obscure and disputed points in the succession of some of the Cathedral organists have been satisfactorily cleared up by Mr. West. It has frequently been stated that Henry Loosemore, Mus.B., became organist of Exeter Cathedral after the Restoration; but it has been proved by entries in the records of King's College, Cambridge, that he continued as organist of the latter uninterruptedly from 1627 until his death in 1670. He has been confused with John Loosemore (probably his brother), who, between the years 1660 and 1665, was engaged in building the celebrated Exeter organ. Mr. West has evidently remembered the canon laid down by Dr. Routh, the famous centenarian, President of Magdalen College, Oxford, and has verified his references, for, instead of copying the untrustworthy statements and mutilated data of previous musical historians, he has derived the bulk of his information from the various Chapter records, besides consulting many reliable works by writers on Cathedrals and Cathedral music, such as Browne Willis, Dart, Bentham, Drake, Bloxam, Noke, Havergal, Walcott, Schindler, and Chester; Jebb, Barrett, Crawford, and others. In some cases old manuscript organ books have been found useful in supplying a missing name or date.

The compiler does not stop at the Cathedrals, for he carries us on to Westminster Abbey, the Chapels Royal of St. James, and St. George, Windsor, the Temple Church, the College Chapels of New, Magdalen, and St. John's, Oxford, and of King's, Trinity, and St. John's, Cambridge, Eton, Winchester, St. Michael's College, Tenbury, and St. Columba's College, Rathfarnham, near Dublin.

There is an imposing list of authorities consulted and a capital index of names. Altogether the book embraces a very wide and deeply interesting subject, and it ought to find a place on the shelves of every Cathedral library and Church music school, and indeed of those of every student of that branch of musical art in which we, as a nation, most excel. It is instructive, trustworthy, interesting, and full of minute research, and cannot fail, we are sure, to become popular.

First Elementary Grade of Pianoforte Playing. Compiled and arranged by L. Ramann. Translated by Harry Brett. Parts I. and II. [Breitkopf and Härtel.]

There is much merit in this primer. The melodies are based on folk-tunes and children's songs, and are therefore calculated to interest budding minds. They are also carefully chosen with regard to increasing executive demands, and equal attention is bestowed on the development of each hand and the cultivation of independence of movement. Mr. Brett's English is somewhat stilted, but the questions which it is suggested the teacher should ask are comprehensive, and, if satisfactorily answered, would certainly indicate a promising pupil.

Eight Four-part Songs for S.A.T.B. Composed by C. Hubert Parry. [Novello and Company, Limited.]

These part-songs are decidedly a notable addition to our already magnificent collection of music of this class. In particular they will appeal to cultured singers, and conductors of amateur choral societies may feel assured of pleasing their choirs by introducing these beautifully written examples of vocal music. The words of three of them, severally named "Phillis," "O Love, they wrong thee much," and "You gentle Nymphs," are taken from an Elizabethan song-book, and the music to which they are allied is delightfully in consonance with their spirit and period. "Phillis" is described as a "herd-maid dainty," and certainly the music is as dainty as any maid could wish to be associated with. "O Love, they wrong thee much" is remarkable for the easy flow and independence of the part-writing. It is music to linger over. There is genuine humour in the setting of "You gentle Nymphs," and, well sung, it would be most effective. The words of "At her fair hands" are by Robert Jones, and concern a damsel who is deaf to the entreaties of her lover. Wisdom counsels his retirement, but inclination bids him still to persist, and the alternate phases of mind are cleverly echoed in the music, and with a spice of humour that considerably adds to the attractiveness of the setting. "Home of my heart" is another lover's plea. The text is by Arthur Benson, and the music, of expressive character, contains some specially beautiful harmonic effects. "Come, pretty wag, and sing," is a gay little song by Martin Pierson, and the music is as blythesome as the text. It demands precise and crisp singing, but it will well repay careful rehearsal. Robert Bridge's little poem, "Ye thrilled me once," forms the text of the seventh of this series, and the pregnant lines have received most sympathetic treatment. The final part-song is happily entitled "Better music ne'er was known," the words by Beaumont and Fletcher being set with a deftness and craftsmanship that justify the opening line being applied to this music; in fact, the line may be used as a true criticism of the entire series.

Five Songs. Words by Raymond Warner. Music by Garnet Wolseley Cox.

Six Lyrics. Words by James Russell Lowell. Music by J. Allanson Benson.

[Weekes and Co.]

Mr. Wolseley Cox is a young composer of decided promise. He has poetic fancy, perception of the appropriate, melodic invention, and has manifestly been well trained in his craft. These attributes are clearly shown in this collection of five songs, severally called "Night," "Spring," "Kisses," "Morning Song," and "Remembrance." All these possess great merit, the first and the fourth in exceptional degree. The former is genuinely pathetic, and the very spirit of joyful anticipation and the gladness of a summer dawn seem to have prompted the music of the latter.

Mr. Benson's "Six Lyrics" are more ambitious in character. The most important is a ballad, entitled "The Singing Leaves," in which a poetical story is illustrated by effective music. Of the other songs, the most pleasing are those called "She came and went" and "The Fountain." The former is very suitable to a tenor and the latter to a soprano voice.

Short Settings of the Office of the Holy Communion. Nos. 37 and 38. [Novello and Company, Limited.]

The multiplication of this series must be very welcome to many choirmasters. No. 37 is by Myles B. Foster, and is in the key of C. The greater portion of the choral writing is in four parts; but there is a short bass solo in the Creed and at the beginning of the "Benedictus qui venit"; and the opening of the "Agnus Dei" is set for a soprano voice. In the "Gloria" there are also some passages which might be sung by a soloist. The composer has included an impressive setting of Bishop Heber's hymn, "Bread of the World," to be sung during the celebration. The music is diatonic in character and will present no difficulties to a choir of average abilities.

Mr. Frank E. Tours has provided the music for No. 38. The key chosen is E flat. Two settings are given for the "Kyrie Eleison," exclusive of that for the response after the tenth commandment, a procedure which is to be commended, as it tends to break monotony. In the Creed the sentences beginning "Being of one substance" to "Came down from heaven" are given to the tenors in unison, the remainder of this portion being sung by all the voices. The "Sanctus" is impressively set in four parts throughout, but in the "Benedictus qui venit" two additional solo parts for soprano and tenor are added. There is a short tenor solo in the "Gloria," which is both devotional and jubilant in spirit. The organ accompaniment possesses considerable independence, while, at the same time, it is well laid out to support the voices.

Six Unaccompanied Anthems.

O Thou to whom all creatures bow. Motet for eight voices. Composed by T. Tertius Noble.

[Haughton and Company.]

Mr. Tertius Noble, the gifted organist and choirmaster of York Minster, is one of our most earnest and accomplished musicians. The six unaccompanied anthems are excellent examples of modern high class church music. They demand a well trained and capable choir, and call for musical intelligence from their exponents, but they will assuredly repay the rehearsals bestowed upon them. The words have been admirably selected to meet church requirements.

The motet is based upon the tune "Hereford," composed by Dr. W. Hayes, and it is treated with a mastery of contrapuntal resource and a variety of effects that cannot fail to interest both singers and listeners.

Novello's Parish Choir Book. Nos. 374 and 406 to 413. [Novello and Company, Limited.]

The setting in G of the Benedicite, by J. W. Elliott, which forms No. 374 of this valued series of Church music, possesses some unusual features. The first half of each verse, with the exception of the eighteenth and twenty-seventh verses and the Gloria, is to be sung in unison by the tenors and basses, and the refrain or second part of each verse by the sopranos, also in unison. In the excepted portions all the voices sing the entire verse, and break into four-part harmony for the last three bars; a like method being pursued for the Gloria. The music is in chant form and variety is obtained by harmonic changes in the organ accompaniment. It should be added that no alto voices are required and that the music is easy of execution.

No. 406 is a setting in G of the Magnificat and Nunc dimittis by Battison Haynes, and it is one that merits the attention of all choirmasters who have capable singers at their command. The voice parts are melodious, and although they are chiefly in solid four-part harmony, there are some effective entrances in imitation. The organ accompaniment is full and well balanced. The Gloria is set in fugal form and makes an impressive conclusion. The Nunc dimittis is opened by the tenors and basses in four parts and is allied to music possessing great beauty of tranquil character. The Gloria is the same as that of the Magnificat.

Mr. Lee Williams was asked to contribute to the opening service of last year's Gloucester Festival, and he provided the Magnificat and Nunc dimittis in C, which forms No. 407 of this series. Although written for such a special occasion the music is by no means elaborate or difficult of execution. A notable point is the last verse being sung by the sopranos only, which enables an effective contrast to be secured at the entrance of the Gloria. The first two verses of the Nunc dimittis are designed to be delivered by a bass soloist. The other two verses are set in four parts for tenors and basses, and before the entrance of the Gloria the bass soloist repeats the first verse pianissimo. An impressive arrangement.

No. 408 comprises the Te Deum and Benedictus in chant form, by J. T. Field. The key is A, and although the setting is extremely simple, it contains some admirable contrasts and effects, these being obtained by the voices sometimes singing in unison with variously harmonised organ accompaniment. In the Benedictus further variety is obtained by the verses being alternately sung in unison by the men and boys of the choir, with varied harmonies for the organ accompaniment.

Choirmasters in search of an easy setting of the Te Deum in unison, with occasional four-part choral writing, will find such an one in G, provided by James Shaw, in No. 409. Varied harmonies and independence in the organ accompaniment provide effective contrast.

No. 410 is the Jubilate set by the same composer as that of the preceding number. The key is G and the style is similar to that adopted for the Te Deum. The last verse is written for bass solo, or all the basses in unison.

No. 411 provides a simple arrangement of the Te Deum in B flat by John P. Attwater. The vocal writing is chiefly in four parts and is diatonic in character. A transition to the key of G flat for verses twenty and twenty-one, which are intended to be sung unaccompanied, forms an impressive episode.

In No. 412 Mr. Arthur H. D. Prendergast has set the Magnificat and Nunc dimittis in continuation of Boyce's Morning Service in C. He has made deft use of some of the phrases of the latter in the Magnificat and employed Boyce's setting of the Gloria of the Jubilate for that of the Nunc dimittis. Mr. Prendergast has also cleverly imitated the style of the old composer, and the result is worthy of wide favour.

A simple arrangement of the Te Deum in chant form, by Sir John Stainer, will be found in No. 413. A quadruple chant in A flat has been adopted with modifications to meet the requirements of the text. The organ part doubles the voice parts save where the latter are in unison, when simple but effective harmonies are written for the instrument.

Autumn Glory. By E. L. Newman.
Morceau Caracteristique. By William Milner.
Valse Caprice. By Ernest Dale.
[Weekes and Co.]

Amateur pianists in search of solos of light and pleasing character and moderate difficulty may be recommended the above pieces. "Autumn Glory" is a reverie, and manifestly the thoughts which have prompted the musing fit have been pleasant.

The "Morceau Caracteristique" (why not "Characteristic piece"?) is bright and interesting and very effective considering the moderate demands it makes on the player.

The "Waltz Caprice" has little capriciousness, but it is graceful and alluring, and would repay any practice it might require.

New Anthems for Advent. Novello's Octavo Anthems. Nos. 607 and 616. The Night is far spent. Composed by Myles B. Foster. Blessed are they. Composed by Hugh Blair.
[Novello and Company, Limited.]

The words of both these anthems are taken from the New Testament, and both compositions merit wide acceptance. Mr. Foster's work is remarkably well knit, and it is certainly one of the best of his many productions in this form. It is in four vocal parts throughout. The opening is spirited and contains some effective imitative entrances, which, however, will not be found difficult of execution. The second section, in triple measure, is dramatic in character, and an impressive passage caused by a simple enharmonic transition occurs at the words "Lest coming, He find you sleeping." A return to the principal theme leads up to a vigorous conclusion.

Whereas Mr. Foster's anthem exhorts Christians to be on the alert and watching for their Lord's coming, the text of Mr. Blair's composition sets forth the blessedness of those who are watchful. The music of the latter is consequently of a flowing and graceful character, and the part-writing is smooth and grateful to sing. There are no vocal solos, but there are several fugal entrances which give point and interest to the music. Considerable contrapuntal skill is shown in the treatment of the voices, and several very happy effects are produced by simple means, notably in the closing bars, which, sung by a carefully trained choir, would be very charming.

The 'Prentice Pillar. A romantic Opera in one act. Words by Guy Eden. Music composed by Reginald Somerville. [Novello and Company, Limited.]

The merits of Mr. Somerville's opera were recognised on the original production of the work on September 24, 1897, at Her Majesty's Theatre, during a season of English opera, under the management of Mr. E. C. Hedmondt, and as now issued by Messrs. Novello it may be warmly recommended to operatic companies and amateur operatic societies. Only four characters are required, respectively possessing soprano, tenor, baritone, and bass voices, and the vocal writing does not present exceptional difficulties. Only one scene is required for the telling of the poetical story, and the instrumental music has been effectively arranged for the pianoforte. Apart from its acceptability in its entirety, there are several songs which could be sung separately with excellent effect. The first tenor song, in particular, with its graceful melody and the opportunities afforded for expressive and impassioned utterance, would form a valuable addition to the repertory of a capable singer, and the duet, "O mighty piece of sculpture," may be recommended to all soprano and tenor vocalists.

Hohenlinden. Cantata for chorus of Men's Voices (T.T.B.B.) and Orchestra. The words by Thomas Campbell. The music by Percy Pitt.
[Novello and Company, Limited.]

The spirit of Campbell's well-known and vivid battle scene seems to palpitate in Mr. Pitt's stirring and dramatic setting. The work was performed at the London Musical Festival, at the Queen's Hall, on May 11 last, and made so favourable an impression that it is to be hoped the composition may be heard again in central London at no distant date. Meantime, it well merits the attention of amateur choral societies, who would find in it music interesting to study and effective to sing. The choral writing is vigorous and direct in expression, and the bold and striking harmonic changes excite and sustain the attention of the listener.

MUSIC IN BIRMINGHAM.

(From our own Correspondent.)

Most of our concert-giving organisations have now issued their prospectuses for the coming season. The Festival Choral Society's first concert is fixed for the 19th inst., when Mendelssohn's "Elijah" will be performed. At the succeeding concerts the programmes will consist of a concert-recital of Wagner's "The Flying Dutchman" and a selection from the works of Handel, Coleridge-Taylor's "Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast," and Sullivan's "Light of the World." The new City Choral Society has commenced rehearsals, and will, during the season, bring out Coleridge-Taylor's "Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast," Saint-Saëns's "Christmas" Oratorio, and Gounod's "St. Cecilia" Mass. The societies that chiefly give the cheap Saturday evening concerts announce a number of works. The Midland Musical Society will perform Handel's "Messiah," Mendelssohn's "Elijah," and Gounod's "Faust" and "Redemption." The Choral Union promises "Samson," "Messiah," "Elijah," and "Maritana." The Choral and Orchestral Society will perform a new cantata, "A Song of Thanksgiving," by its conductor, Mr. Joseph H. Adams, and Dr. Herbert Wareing's cantata "The Wreck of the Hesperus," which has not yet been heard in Birmingham. Other works are "The Messiah," "Creation," and "Cavalleria Rusticana."

Mr. Halford's orchestral concerts have already been referred to. His exceedingly interesting series of symphonies, ranging from Haydn and Mozart to Tschaïkowsky and Stanford, will be appreciated by his supporters, who are growing in numbers. The great event of the season will be the visit, in March next, of M. Rachmaninoff, who will play the Pianoforte Concerto he has written expressly for these concerts.

Mr. Max Mossel will introduce Señor Sarasate, Miss Fanny Davies, and other distinguished artists at his drawing-room concerts, and Mr. Oscar Pollack will have a stronger array of talent than usual at the matinées of the Royal Society of Artists.

MUSIC IN BRISTOL AND DISTRICT.

Colston Hall has remained for just over twelve months in practically the same state that it was in soon after the fire, and, consequently, no musical performances on a large scale can be given in the city. The directors have recently accepted a contract for the rebuilding of the hall, which is to be completed by next August, at which time the organ, to be constructed by Mr. Henry Willis, and the gift of Sir W. H. Wills, M.P., will be ready. Meanwhile, the Choral Society has decided to rehearse under Mr. Riseley, and a general desire is expressed to give another concert next spring in London.

On the 27th ult. the Bristol Madrigal Society commenced its practices for the season under a new president, Sir George W. Edwards having last January resigned the office, which he had held for seventeen years, while for sixty years he had been a member. Mr. E. A. Harvey, who was hon. secretary and treasurer, succeeds Sir George as president. Mr. D. W. Rootham has, for the thirty-third time, been chosen conductor. Among the compositions taken in hand for the Ladies' Night in January are the Elizabethan madrigals which were sung under the direction of Sir Walter Parratt at Windsor Castle on the Queen's eightieth birthday, and two new madrigals, composed by Mr. Cyril Rootham, of Hampstead, "Strew on her roses" and "Love and Laughter," both of which he has dedicated to the Society.

The Bristol and Clifton Philharmonic Society has decided to give a performance of "The Messiah," on December 16. A miscellaneous concert will be given in the spring, when Mendelssohn's "Athalie," Gade's "Psyche," and Eaton Faning's "Daybreak" are to be performed, under the conductorship of Mr. E. Pavey and Mr. E. Cook.

At Easton-in-Gordano, the St. George's Choral Society, under Mr. Hamilton Clarke, has commenced its practices. It is intended to give in the church, with orchestral accompaniment, Mendelssohn's "Lauda Sion" and Farmer's "Christ and His soldiers." Sir John Stainer's "Crucifixion" will be performed in Lent. Mr. Clarke, who has been organist and choirmaster at Christchurch, Pill, for twenty-three years, has resigned his position, and will discharge similar functions at St. George's in the adjoining parish.

MUSIC IN DUBLIN.

All our musical societies are beginning to wake up after the summer holiday, and meetings to complete the arrangements for the coming season are being held everywhere.

The Dublin Musical Society has decided to give only three, instead of four concerts. This is chiefly due to the fact that the Hall of the Royal University in Earlsfort Terrace, our only adequate concert-room, is taken up during November by an Exhibition of the Arts and Crafts Society of Ireland, and the first concert of the Society, therefore, cannot take place before December 21, when "The Messiah" will be given with a full band and chorus.

The programme of the Dublin Orchestral Society for the coming season will include performances of Brahms's Symphony, No. 2, Beethoven's Nos. 2, 4, and 8, and several new orchestral pieces. Signor Esposito, who will play Schumann's Pianoforte Concerto, is again the conductor.

The Hallé band, under Dr. Richter's baton, will give two performances, on November 28 and 29, the first an evening concert in the Rotunda and the second a matinée in the Theatre Royal.

The need of a large public concert hall is a very pressing one, and although the senate of the Royal University allow some concerts to be given in their great hall, there are many conditions which prohibit their permitting many musical performances to be given there; a notable example of this being the case of the Hallé concerts, which are debarred by certain conditions laid down by the University authorities in their charter.

It only remains to mention the Dublin Instrumental Club, whose success at the last Feis Ceoil appears to have renewed the zeal of the indefatigable conductor and secretary, Mr. Robert Dwyer and Mr. H. M. Fitzgibbon, and the committee of which have drawn up a most rigorous programme of rehearsals and practices which, in the words of the prospectus, is framed "with the idea of making the Club a real school for orchestral practice, and a decided and influential factor in the advancement and appreciation of music in Dublin."

MUSIC IN EDINBURGH.

The preparations for the winter season follow very much the same lines as those of last year.

Among choral organisations the first place must be given to the premier society, the Edinburgh Choral Union, which in this, its forty-first session, promises Dvorák's "Stabat Mater" and MacCunn's "Cameronian's Dream," at the third of Messrs. Paterson's series of choral and orchestral concerts. The annual performance of "The Messiah" will be given in the Music Hall, on New Year's Day, 1900; and "Elijah" has been chosen for the third concert in March.

Mr. Kirkhope's choir will provide the chorus for Beethoven's Ninth Symphony at Messrs. Paterson's seventh concert, on January 22, 1900, and at the same concert they will sing Rheinberger's "Cristoforus," a work they have already twice given in Edinburgh. Mr. Miller Craig's choir set forth, as the session's programme, Durante's Magnificat, Grieg's "At the cloister gate," and Liza Lehmann's "Lochinvar."

The youngest and not the least energetic of our choral societies is Mr. Moonie's choir, which in this its fourth season is to be engaged on Coleridge-Taylor's "Hiawatha," MacCunn's "Lord Ullin's Daughter," and the "Creation."

Messrs. Paterson and Son's thirteenth annual series of orchestral and choral concerts begins on December 4, in the McEwan Hall, when the Scottish Orchestra, under Herr Wilhelm Bruch, will open its sixth and its most critical session. The names of Miss Lilian Blauvelt, Madame Marchesi, and Mr. Henschel among the vocalists, and M. Ysaye and Signor Busoni among the instrumental soloists are the most interesting on the prospectus.

Messrs. Paterson also announce recitals by M. Dohnányi (who scored such a remarkable success last year), Señor Sarasate, and Madame Albani.

MUSIC IN GLASGOW.

During the approaching season the Choral and Orchestral Union will give no fewer than thirteen classical concerts, and as many "Pops." on Saturdays. Four of these are to be choral, the performers being the Glasgow Choral Union (Mr. Bradley, conductor), with the support of the Scottish Orchestra (Herr Wilhelm Bruch, conductor); the other concerts will be orchestral. The choral programme of the Union will comprise "The Messiah," "Golden Legend," Dvorák's "Stabat Mater," Brahms's "Song of Destiny," Mendelssohn's "Walpurgis Night," and César Franck's "Les Béatitudes." It is now certain that the last-named work will be introduced during the season, and this will be its first performance in Great Britain. Amongst the solo performers who will appear during the season are—violinists: Herr Karl Halir, for the first time in Glasgow, and M. Ysaye; and pianists: M. Busoni and Mr. Frederick Dawson, in whose progress Glasgow amateurs have all along taken a lively interest.

Mr. Walton has carried on his series of organ recitals in the Cathedral with a considerable measure of success.

MUSIC IN LIVERPOOL AND DISTRICT.

Among the works which the Liverpool Philharmonic Society has arranged to give during the ensuing season are Berlioz's "Faust" (10th inst.), Handel's "Messiah" (December 19), Mendelssohn's "Walpurgis Night" (February 20), and Verdi's "Requiem," which is promised for the concluding concert of the series.

The Liverpool Musical Society are to give performances of "Elijah," "The Redemption," Wagner's "Rienzi," and Sullivan's "Golden Legend." The Society has also booked "King Olaf" for November 16. The chorus has been reduced to something under 150 in number, but consists of carefully selected voices, every member being a trained chorister. As the parts of the chorus have been carefully balanced, the performances are awaited with a considerable degree of interest. Mr. Crossley has again been elected to the conductorship.

Mr. Eugene Goossens has also an interesting prospectus for the ensuing winter. His now celebrated choir has in rehearsal "The Battle Prayer," by Etienne Soubre; a "Soliloquy," by Charles Hansen, which is a novelty; and "The Irish Exiles," by F. A. Gevaert, a work given on one or two occasions last season with great success. The St. Cecilia Musical Society, of Birkenhead, of which Mr. J. W. Appleyard retains the conductorship, has decided to undertake Dvorák's "St. Ludmila." The Wallasey Choral and Orchestral Society, under the direction of Mr. J. F. Swift, has arranged to give "The Messiah" and the "Creation,"

Some interesting new things are in the programmes of the Liverpool Orchestral Society. A symphonic poem by Mr. Granville Bantock will, towards the close of the season, be performed for the first time, under the direction of the composer. Mr. Coleridge-Taylor's "Hiawatha" Overture will be given. A series of "Silhouettes," by Arensky; Mr. William Wallace's symphonic poem, "Sister Helen"; Variations for pianoforte and orchestra by Dr. Villiers Stanford, on the theme of "Down among the dead men"; and works by Mr. Edward German and Mr. Elgar will also have a first hearing at these concerts. Mr. A. E. Rodewald, the able honorary conductor, has compiled, as usual, an exceedingly interesting prospectus. The old "Società Armonica," which, thanks to Mr. Vasco Akeroyd, has renewed its youth, will give several interesting orchestral concerts.

The series of concerts at New Brighton Tower has now concluded. The undertaking has proved a remarkable success. One of the pleasantest of the series was the Edward German concert. On the 3rd ult., when Sir Alexander Mackenzie conducted the selections from his own compositions, his prelude entitled "Astarte" was heard for the first time. It is founded on a dramatic passage from Byron's "Manfred," the leading theme being varied in sympathy with the successive ideas suggested by the poetry. The work proved to be a most interesting feature in an attractive programme. It unites mastery of orchestral resource to real dramatic fire and fibre. Sir Alexander's other compositions included the Scottish Rhapsody, No. 1, the Orchestral Ballad "La Belle Dame sans Merci," the "Britannia" Overture, the Benedictus for violin, and some songs, all of which were well received by a large and appreciative audience.

MUSIC IN MANCHESTER.

After a glorious summer, bringing keenest enjoyment of outdoor life, the first touch of autumn very quickly turns thought to the long evenings of the duller months, now so rapidly approaching, and to the sufficiency of the rumoured projects for their enlivening. Not, however, until October do the plans of those upon whom we are accustomed to depend for our chief musical pleasures grow to such maturity and completeness as to justify the issuing of definite and reliable promises, and the opening of subscription lists in full confidence that adequate provision has been made to meet all reasonable expectation. Of course, our first desire must ever be to learn what fresh interest may be added to those great Thursday evening concerts, so many years ago established by the late Sir Charles Hallé, and still—in their forty-second season—bearing his name. It has long been known that by Dr. Hans Richter their control is to be undertaken, although engagements in Vienna must, at any rate for this winter, take him away from us in December and January. During Dr. Richter's absence Professor Stanford will take his place, except on December 21 and 22, when Mr. R. H. Wilson, the able director of the choir, will conduct the annual performances of "The Messiah."

The choral works to be produced for the first time here include the so long withheld oratorio "Job," of Sir Hubert Parry, Mr. F. H. Cowen's now generally popular "Ode to the Passions," a selection from Wagner's "Parsifal," and the Magnificat of Bach, whose "St. Matthew" Passion is to be revived.

With a wise regard to the financial result, as well as to its unquestionable supremacy among the works of the century, Mendelssohn's "Elijah" is to be given; and it is certainly not imprudent to withdraw from the scheme Brahms's "Requiem," so sombre and so unsuited to the concert-room. The repetition of Beethoven's Choral, C minor, and "Eroica" symphonies (which were all given last winter) will inevitably give rise to reminiscences; but some welcome novelties are promised, which will give freshness and variety and enlarge the scope of our experience. The list of the engagements already made appears fairly liberal, and it includes the names of two young local pianists in whom we must feel special interest—Miss Irene Schaefsburg (a student of our Royal College of Music) and Miss Pauline St. Angelo, who lately created a most favourable impression in London.

Only the dates of the admirable chamber recitals of Mr. Brodsky have yet been published, but there is already so large an accession of subscribers as to cause a difficulty in fairly accommodating them, and a consequent prospect of a considerable augmentation of the fund which Mr. Brodsky so generously devotes to the encouragement of deserving talent in the College over which he presides.

Mr. G. W. Lane every year grows bolder in his arrangements and increasingly liberal in providing for the delectation of his patrons. This season he promises to bring before them Miss Blauvelt, Madame Marchesi, and a host of singers of eminence; as well as M. Busoni, M. Pecskai, Miss Mary Mukle (a violoncellist new to Manchester), and Lady Hallé, should her other engagements permit. And Mr. Lane's large choir will, as in former years, agreeably diversify the programmes and add to the charm of the eye as well as refresh the ear.

The star concerts given by Mr. Harrison, in conjunction with Messrs. Hime and Addison of this city, serve a very useful purpose, and will, this winter, be unusually attractive, inasmuch as both Madame Melba and Madame Patti will appear, as well as Miss Clara Butt, Miss Ada Crossley, Messrs. Edward Lloyd, Charles Santley, Andrew Black, and a host of instrumental celebrities.

The resumption of Mr. Pyne's organ recitals at the Town Hall will be heartily welcomed by very many lovers of such music as always appeals to English people of serious and cultivated taste. Mr. Pyne's masterly execution of standard classical works is highly appreciated, and this year he will dip more freely into our English répertoire.

The many smaller suburban amateur societies, which play so important a part in our organisation and in the diffusion of new works, are all actively preparing their cantatas and their selections of concerted choral music. The "Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast" of Coleridge-Taylor will not only be repeated by the Vocal Society of Dr. Watson in the city, but given with orchestral accompaniment at Bowdon, in addition to Bridge's "Flag of England" and Elgar's very attractive choral songs "From the Bavarian Highlands," under the direction of Mr. C. H. Fogg. The Pendleton Choral Union of Mr. Blacow—also fortunate in having an orchestra—will grapple with some standard oratorios and essay interesting smaller works. At Stalybridge and Ashton, Mr. Thomas Keighley, in addition to his regular organ recitals on Saturday and Sunday evenings, will endeavour to popularise chamber music; and at Oldham, Mr. J. F. Slater has announced a series of light opera recitals, and the continuance of those researches among church music which have rendered the services at the Parish Church of Middleton so attractive.

MUSIC IN NORTHUMBERLAND AND DURHAM.

Judging by the prospectuses which have been issued by the principal musical societies in this district, the coming season promises to be one of exceptional interest. The Newcastle and Gateshead Choral Union announces, for November 24, a performance which will include Beethoven's Choral Symphony (No. 9) and Brahms's "Song of Destiny," with a chorus of 350 voices and the Hallé Orchestra of eighty performers, under the conductorship of Dr. Hans Richter. For its second concert, on March 27, 1900, the Choral Union will give a performance of Haydn's "Seasons." It is claimed that this will be the first occasion upon which "The Seasons" will have been performed in its entirety in Newcastle.

The Middlesbrough Musical Union will give four concerts during the season. The first of these will take place on November 3, for which the Hallé Orchestra, conducted by Dr. Hans Richter, has been engaged. The programme will consist of Beethoven's Symphony in C minor (No. 5), selections from Wagner, madrigals, &c. The second concert will take place on December 26, and will consist of a performance of "The Messiah"; for the third concert, on February 14, Berlioz's "Faust" has been selected; at the final concert of the season, on April 4, Mozart's "King Thamos" and the closing scene of the first Act of Wagner's "Parsifal" will be performed. At this concert Dr. Joseph Joachim will play Beethoven's Violin Concerto. The conductor of the Society is Mr. Nicholas Kilburn, to whose untiring efforts a large measure of its success is due.

The Sunderland Philharmonic Society will give two concerts during the season. Special interest will attach to the first of these, fixed for December 14, inasmuch as it will introduce to the North of England a new work by Mr. S. Coleridge-Taylor, entitled "Minnehaha," the words, like the same composer's "Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast," being the second of the scenes from Longfellow's "Song of Hiawatha." At this concert Stanford's "Revenge" will also be performed. At the second concert, on March 13, Haydn's "Creation" will be given. The conductor of the Society is also Mr. N. Kilburn.

The South Shields Choral Society, under the conductorship of Mr. M. Fairs, will give a performance of Handel's "Samson" on December 13; and on March 28 Mendelssohn's "Loreley" and Mr. Coleridge-Taylor's "Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast."

The Bishop Auckland Musical Society will give a performance of Mendelssohn's "St. Paul" on December 13, with Mr. N. Kilburn as conductor.

The Newcastle Amateur Vocal Society will give J. F. Barnett's "Ancient Mariner" on December 12, and, in March, Mendelssohn's "Lauda Sion."

The first concert of the Newcastle Chamber Music Society will be given on October 24, when Señor Sarasate and Dr. Otto Neitzel will play.

MUSIC IN SHEFFIELD AND DISTRICT.

THE forthcoming Sheffield Triennial Festival, which takes place on the 11th, 12th, and 13th inst., is the absorbing topic here. Its financial success is already assured, and, so far as can be foreseen, the musical results promise to be equally satisfactory.

In other directions the coming season is likely to be a busy one. The Sheffield Amateur Musical Society (Mr. F. Schollhammer) announces Handel's "Judas Maccabæus" for December 19. The Choral Union (Mr. S. Suckley), with commendable enterprise, has undertaken to introduce Mr. Elgar's "Caractacus" to a Sheffield audience.

The Musical Union (Dr. H. Coward) are rehearsing Goring Thomas's "The Swan and the Skylark" for its opening concert. At a later concert, Dr. Coward's new work, a choral ballad entitled "Tubal Cain," will be performed. The Male Glee and Madrigal Society (Mr. J. A. Rodgers) announces Lloyd's "The Longbeard's Saga" and S. S. Wesley's "When fierce conflicting passions" for its winter concert. The Choral Society in connection with St. Mary's Church will perform the "Hymn of Praise" on the 23rd inst., under Mr. J. A. Rodgers.

The Rotherham Choral Society (Mr. T. Brameld) issues a satisfactory report and announces "The Messiah," "Hymn of Praise," and Rossini's "Stabat Mater." The Barnsley St. Cecilia Society (Dr. Coward) will perform "The Messiah" and Mr. Elgar's "King Olaf." The Retford Choral Society (Mr. Hamilton White) is contemplating an active season, the programmes including Beethoven's "Mount of Olives," Elgar's "Lux Christi," Gounod's "Faust," and Samuel Wesley's "In exitu Israel."

The Chesterfield Harmonic Society (Mr. G. A. Seed) announces Parry's "Job" for its first concert. "Job" is also announced for the Attercliffe Zion Choral Society. Mr. W. W. Chisholm, its esteemed conductor, having resigned, the post has been offered to Mr. H. C. Jackson. The Hoyland and District Choral Society announces a performance of Bennett's "May Queen," under Mr. G. M. Coates. At Heeley the Ann's Road Choral Society will perform Haydn's "Creation" under Mr. E. Jeffs.

Miss Foxon has again arranged for a series of attractive chamber concerts at the Albert Hall, Sheffield, at which Dr. Joachim and Señor Sarasate are to appear.

MUSIC IN STAFFORDSHIRE.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

THE following are among the most important prospective events for the approaching season. The North Stafford Festival Society will perform Schumann's "Paradise and the Peri," Tschaïkowsky's "Pathetic" Symphony, Coleridge-Taylor's "Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast" and "The Death of Minnehaha," Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony, Dr. Swinnerton Heap's "The Voice of Spring," Handel's "Messiah," and Weber's Clarinet Concerto.

The Stafford Choral Society, at its two concerts, will perform Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise" and Sullivan's "Golden Legend." The Harvest Festival at St. Mary's Parish Church will be marked by the performance of Dr. Garrett's Harvest Cantata.

THE ceremony of unveiling the monument erected to Brahms, and in which Dr. Joachim, as president of the committee, will be the chief actor, will take place at Meiningen on the 7th inst. There will be performances in connection with that event of the "Deutsches Requiem" in the Stadt-Kirche in the morning, of the "Triumphlied" in the afternoon, and an orchestral concert will take place at the Hof-Theater in the evening. The musical festival to be held at Meiningen on the two following days, under Herr Fritz Steinbach's direction, will include the performance, on the 8th inst., of chamber music (by the Joachim Quartet), of Bach's cantata, "Gleich wie der Schnee," Beethoven's Violin Concerto (Dr. Joachim) and Ninth Symphony; on the 9th inst., second chamber concert, Schubert's "Unfinished" Symphony, Mozart's Pianoforte Concerto in A (Leonard Borwick), Brahms's Fourth Symphony, and other works. An exhibition of portraits of Brahms, illustrative works, and manuscripts will also be held.

LORD STRATHCONA AND MOUNT ROYAL has recommended Miss Clara Lichtenstein as resident instructor in music to the Royal Victoria College, Montreal, which he has founded and endowed in the interests of the higher education of women. Miss Lichtenstein was a distinguished student at the Budapest Royal Academy, and a pupil of Liszt and of other famous teachers there. She has been a member of the musical profession in Edinburgh for eleven years. Lord Strathcona's recommendation to the Board was supported by letters and testimonials from Lord Rosebery, Sir A. C. Mackenzie, Sir John Stainer, Professor Niecks, Professor Prout, Professor Popper, Mr. A. J. Hipkins, Mr. George Henschel, and other distinguished musicians.

THE Alexandra Palace Choral and Orchestral Societies gave an excellent performance, on the 2nd ult., of Gounod's "Faust." The soloists were Madame Fanny Moody, Miss Lilly Moody, Messrs. John Child and Charles Manners, whose names are a guarantee of efficiency. The choir were excellent, singing with decided attack and feeling, and earned a unanimous encore for the "Soldiers' Chorus." The orchestra, though not numerically strong, did well.

The Tonic Sol-fa Association held a Juvenile Choral Festival, at the Alexandra Palace, on the 16th ult. A selection was made from the members of the Association in Leyton, Leytonstone, West Ham, Stratford, Hackney, and the adjoining districts. The voices numbered about 2,000, and the performance was successfully carried out, under the direction of Mr. Filmer Rook, the organist being Mr. C. H. Rowcliffe.

The names of Miss Maggie Davies and Mrs. Clara Novello Davies and the Royal Welsh Ladies' Choir were inadvertently omitted from the report of the National Eisteddfod in our last issue. Both these ladies and the ladies' choir rendered efficient service at the opening concert of the Eisteddfod held at Cardiff.

Mr. C. H. Allen Gill has been appointed conductor of the Muswell Hill and East Finchley Choral and Orchestral Society.

Mr. Fred. Gostelow has been appointed conductor of the Luton Choral Society.

FOREIGN NOTES.

Amsterdam.—The celebrated Amsterdam a capella Choir, which had been dissolved some years ago, has been resuscitated, under the direction of Herr Johannes Messchaert, the distinguished baritone, and gave a very successful concert last month.——The Dutch Opera resumed its performances on the 1st ult. with Goldmark's "Die Königin von Saba," and the season promises to be a very active one, under the auspices of the new conductor, Herr Peter Raabe, a well-known Berlin musician.

Bayreuth.—There was no falling off this year in the attractive powers of the Festspiele, the house having been completely sold out for every representation, while the demand for tickets, in many instances, exceeded the possibilities of supply. The gross receipts amounted to 600,000 marks (£30,000), from which, of course, have to be deducted the undoubtedly heavy expenses. Still, the net result cannot fail to be an entirely satisfactory one to the heirs of the creator of the Festspiele. Indeed, one may say, without irreverence, that what to him was essentially a res severa, has proved to them, in a material sense, a verum gaudium.

Bergen.—Edvard Grieg is engaged upon the score of an oratorio entitled "Peace," to words by Björnson, which he hopes to complete by next spring, its first performance being intended to take place in Paris, during the Great Exhibition next year.

Berlin.—The "Lieder-Verein," the oldest Berlin Choral Society, with the exception of the "Liedertafel," celebrated, on the 11th ult., the seventieth anniversary of its foundation. During that period, the Society has had but three conductors—viz., Julius Schneider, Gustav Janke, and Carl Mengewein, the present holder of the office. Amongst its numerous members, honorary or otherwise, were Zelter, Franz Abt, Wilhelm Taubert, Kücken, Otto Nicolai (the composer of "The Merry Wives of Windsor"), F. Schneider, and Reissiger. Amongst the works to be produced during the present season by the Singakademie are "Israel in Egypt," "Elijah," and Kiel's "Requiem."——At the Royal Opera, Eugène d'Albert's new opera, "Cain," and Siegfried Wagner's "Bärenhäuter" are in course of being mounted, together with a new operatic work, "Die Grille," by Johann Doebber.——The Conservatorium and pianoforte school conducted by the late Emil Breslaur has been placed under the direction of Herr G. Lazarus, for many years one of the leading professors at that excellent Institution.——Felix Weingartner has employed his leisure during the summer months in completing the scores of a new Symphony, in E flat major, and of a string quartet; the latter is to be first performed by the Halir quartet party during this winter.

Brussels.—The prize offered by the musical section of the Royal Academy of Sciences for a pianoforte trio has been awarded to M. François Russe, a young pianist, who is also one of the laureates of the Conservatoire. At the Théâtre de la Monnaie, which re-opened its doors on the 4th ult., M. Massenet's new fairy opera, "Cendrillon," is to be produced on the 10th inst., under the composer's direction. The new opera by Jean Blockx, entitled "Till Eulenspiegel," is in active course of preparation.

Buenos Ayres.—A new opera by Arturo Berutti, entitled "Yupanki," was brought out recently at the National Opera with success. The composer, several of whose works have already been successfully produced in Italy, is a native of the Argentine Republic.

Chicago.—The prize offered by M. Henri Marteau, the distinguished French violinist, exclusively to American composers, has been awarded to Mr. H. Schvenefeld, a Chicago musician, for a sonata for violin and pianoforte.

Coblenz.—A musical festival on an important scale is being organized by the united choirs of Coblenz, Trier, and Saarbrücken for next year, and is to be held thenceforward annually at one of these three towns in alternation.

Cologne.—According to the annual report just published, the number of pupils at the Conservatorium, during the past academical year, was 479, many of these being of foreign nationality. The excellent Institution remains, as hitherto, under the direction of Professor Wüllner, supported by a staff of forty teachers.

Florence.—A new opera, "Don Giovanni," the libretto founded upon Zorilla's celebrated drama, is shortly to be expected from the pen of Signor Antonio Scontrino, a professor at the Royal Musical Institution of Florence.

Kiel.—A vocal society has been founded recently with the special object of cultivating songs written in "plattdeutsch," the low German dialect immortalised by Fritz Reuter and Klaus Groth, and of which there is a rich store, both amongst the Volkslieder and the settings by old and modern composers.

La Morra.—A statue was unveiled last month, in this little Piedmontese town of Giuseppe Gabetti, the composer of the inspiriting military march, known as "Marcia reale," which was introduced by royal decree throughout the army in 1834, and is being played on every public appearance of the King or members of the royal family in Italy. Gabetti, who was a bandmaster in an infantry regiment, died at La Morra in 1862. His famous composition had brought him in the munificent sum of about £4!

Milan.—Leoncavallo's new opera, "Zaza," is being mounted at the Teatro Lirico, where it is to be brought out during the season. It is in four acts and contains three principal parts and some important choral numbers.

Munich.—Mozart's "Le Nozze di Figaro" has been revived with great success, at the Royal Theatre, under Herr Stavenhagen's direction, the original secco recitatives, as revised by Hermann Levi, being now made use of for the first time and with excellent effect. The first novelty of the present season, the music-drama "Horand und Hilde," by Victor Gluth, a professor at the Royal Akademie der Tonkunst, is to be brought out in the course of this month.—Herr Sigmund von Hausegger, composer of the opera "Zinnober," has been appointed conductor of the Kaim orchestra, in association with Herr Weingartner.

Pará.—A remarkable oil painting representing the scene in the sick-chamber of Carlos Gomez, the composer of "I Guarany" (who died in this his native town some years since), is just now being exhibited in Rome. It is the joint work of the painters Capranesi and De Angelis, and has been executed on behalf of the Pará municipality, where it is to be placed in the public hall. The Brazilians are very proud of their only composer of European celebrity.

Prague.—The Goethe Festival (150th anniversary of the poet's birth), at the German Theatre, included the performance of "Egmont," with Beethoven's music; of "Goetz von Berlichingen," preceded by the same master's "Prometheus" Overture, and of "Tasso," to which Mendelssohn's overture, "Meeresstille und glückliche Fahrt," had been selected as a prelude. The performances were in every way worthy of the occasion.——The cycle of Smetana's operas at the National (Czech) Theatre commenced on the 20th ult., and comprises all the recognised lyrical stage works of the Bohemian master, to the number of eight. The cycle will conclude with a concert performance of the six symphonic poems and other important orchestral and vocal compositions of the master.——Joseph Bayer's new ballet, "Olga," is being performed with immense success at the German Theatre.

Pyrmont.—A committee has been formed with the object of erecting a statue to Albert Lortzing, who for some years occupied the post of orchestral conductor in this town, and whose popularity as a composer of comic opera seems to have taken deep root in the heart of a certain section of the German-speaking races.

Rio de Janeiro.—Under the auspices of the Brazilian Government, a competition has been opened for the composition of a festal hymn and a cantata, to be performed in connection with the forthcoming celebration of the four hundredth anniversary of the discovery of Brazil.

Rome.—A new opera, "La Fornarina," the libretto dealing with an episode in the life of Rafael, the great painter, the music by the Maëstro Collina, was brought out at the National Theatre, last month, and well received.——Puccini has nearly completed the score of his new opera, "La Tosca," the first performance of which is to take place at the Costanzi Theatre, under Signor Mugnone's direction.

Venice.—The first performance of a new oratorio, "La Resurrezione del Cristo," the composer of which is the Abbé Jacopo Tomadini, took place at the little town of Cividale, by the combined choirs of Saint Mark, Venice, and of the Cathedral of Padua. The performance was an excellent one and the work met with an enthusiastic reception, several numbers, including the final Hallelujah, being redemanded.

Vienna.—Under the title of "New Philharmonic Orchestra," an important addition has been made to the orchestral institutions in this capital. It has been founded under the auspices of the "Wiener Musikerbund," and placed under the experienced direction of Herr Carl Stix, formerly conductor of the German Theatre in New York.——The question of the conductorship of the Philharmonic Society's concerts during the approaching season is at present an open one, as both Herr Mahler and Dr. Richter are said to have declined the post. Under these circumstances, the committee will, probably, have to engage some eminent conductor from elsewhere for each concert. Dr. Richter has just signed a renewal of his engagement with the directors of the Imperial Opera, by which the services of the distinguished musician have been secured until January 1, 1905. A new fairy opera, entitled "Es war einmal" (Once upon a time), from the pen of A. von Zemlinsky, is shortly to be brought out here. The Goethe celebrations included the performance, at the Imperial Theatre, of "Egmont," with Beethoven's music, and of "Die Zauberflöte," the latter having been suggested on this occasion by the fact of the great poet having written a continuation, or "second part," of the story contained in Schikaneder's libretto. Herr Mahler conducted and the enthusiasm of the audience was considerable.——A special performance, in memory of the late Johann Strauss, took place on the 1st ult., at the Theater-an-der-Wien. The work chosen for performance was the "Zigeunerbaron," which was preceded by a dramatic prologue, written by Dr. Kalbeck and admirably acted by Fräulein Milton and Herr Josephi. On the 5th ult. the 300th performance was celebrated at this theatre of "Die Fledermaus," the most popular of Strauss's operettas. As regards the posthumous operetta by the latter, entitled "Aschenbrödel," it has been found to be in a more advanced state than had been anticipated, all the melodies and concerted numbers being completely sketched out. The score will be completed by Joseph Bayer.

Weimar.—Performances at the Hof-Theater re-commenced on the 17th ult. with Wagner's "Der fliegende Holländer," and among interesting revivals in the near future are announced Gluck's pastoral opera "Die Maienkönigin" and Weber's "Die drei Pintos."——Concertmeister Nagel, the well-known violinist and teacher, celebrates, on the 1st inst., the twenty-fifth anniversary of his appointment as leading violinist in the Grand Ducal Orchestra. He was greatly esteemed by both Liszt and Hans von Bülow, and has been rendering excellent service to the cause of music in Weimar.

"Unfurnished Apartments" we seem to have heard of, but not an "unfurnished symphony." Such information is, however, furnished by a provincial newspaper, and, furthermore, that the said work is composed by a gentleman named Schubert.

OBITUARY.

HENRY BARRETT-LENNARD.

We regret to record the death of an enthusiastic and devoted Handelian in the person of Mr. Henry Barrett-Lennard, who died at Brighton on August 31, at the age of eighty-one. Born in London, May 28, 1818, Mr. Barrett-Lennard was educated at Westminster School. During his pupilage there he attended the services at the Abbey. One day he heard some music by Handel which so enthralled him that, without any premeditation, he then and there determined to study music. He at once began to take lessons on the organ, which instrument he played until within a few days of his death. He had a small organ in the library of his house at Hampstead, and if a visitor offered to play this instrument the genial old gentleman would always insist upon "something by Handel." In about the year 1844 he acquired a large collection of Handel's scores in the handwriting of the composer's amanuensis, John Christopher Smith, together with Handel's own mahogany book-case, which was made for their reception. This important collection consists of eighty-five volumes, sixty-four of which are uniformly bound. These scores were formerly in the joint-possession of William Harrison (the singer) and Greatorex, organist of Westminster Abbey. Upon the death of the latter, in 1832, they, with the book-case, were sold by auction and knocked down to the then Dean of Westminster (Dr. Ireland) for the sum of 115 guineas. The Dean subsequently gave them to the late J. L. Brownsmith, the organist, from whom they were purchased by their recently departed owner. A drawing of the book-case appeared in the special Handel supplement of The Musical Times in December, 1893. The present writer recalls with amusement a visit he paid to Mr. Barrett-Lennard, when, upon entering the library and being "introduced" to the book-case, its owner, pointing to the interesting piece of furniture, solemnly said: "Go down on your knees, sir, before that." The deceased gentleman was highly gifted and an excellent classical scholar. Quite late in life he made and published English translations of the "Ion," "Hippolytus," and "Alcestis" of Euripides, in their original metres. Although he was one of the old school he took a keen interest in all current events. He had met many interesting notabilities during his long career and was a delightful raconteur. One of the most interesting incidents in his life was his presence at Kensington Palace in May, 1837, when the young Queen Victoria was officially informed of her Accession to the Throne of England. Mr. Barrett-Lennard's father was then Chief Clerk of the Privy Council Office and attended that important ceremony in his official capacity. As he was allowed to take with him a private secretary he selected his son, then aged nineteen, who was thus one of the very few subjects of the Queen who witnessed that memorable and interesting function, and of which, except Her Majesty, he was the last surviving participator.

THOMAS KEMPTON.

Ely Cathedral has lost a veteran singer by the death of Thomas Kempton, who died at Ely on the 11th ult., at the age of seventy-three, he having been connected with the choir of the Cathedral for upwards of sixty years, first as a chorister and afterwards as a lay-clerk. The funeral service in Ely Cathedral was deeply impressive, the choral portions being beautifully rendered, and the lesson was read by the Dean. As the body was taken down the nave to the West door on its way to the cemetery the choir sang the deceased's favourite hymn, "Lead, kindly Light." The Kempton family has been connected with Ely Cathedral for many years. Thomas Kempton, whose Service in B flat is so well known, was organist there in 1750, and there has been a Kempton there ever since. The deceased's father and his uncle were both bass singers in the Cathedral, and the lay-clerk traditions of the family are worthily maintained in the persons of Mr. Thomas Kempton, of St. Paul's Cathedral, and Mr. Bell Kempton (son of the subject of this notice), who is a bass in the choir of St. George's Chapel, Windsor.

BENJAMIN WELLS.

The death took place, at Chiswick, on the 6th ult., of BENJAMIN WELLS, the distinguished flautist, at the age of seventy-three. He was born at Cambridge in the year 1826, and at the early age of nineteen he was appointed first flute at the Royal Academy Concerts, of which Institution he was a student and afterwards an Associate and a Professor. It was at one of these concerts that the great Duke of Wellington, who was in the company of Mendelssohn, personally congratulated him upon his performance. Mr. Wells was an intimate friend of Balfe, and played in the first performance of the "Bohemian Girl," and he was a great favourite with the Prince Consort. He had a wonderful command of flute technique, and was generally acknowledged to be without a rival upon his instrument. Of late years he had toured as a successful lecturer on musical subjects. His remains were interred in Kensal Green Cemetery, where so many musicians are buried.

We have to record the death of NICHOLAS BENNETT, J.P., Glanyrafon, Montgomeryshire, which took place on August 18, at the age of seventy-six. He was a musical and literary antiquary, who had brought together a valuable collection of books dealing with the music, poetry, general literature, and history of Wales. He will be remembered chiefly, however, for his labours in connection with the unpublished melodies of the Principality, of which he had collected from 700 to 800 during the last fifty years of his life. In 1896, 500 of these melodies, selected and arranged for the pianoforte by Mr. Emyln Evans, were published in two volumes, which also contained portraits and biographical sketches of past Welsh harpists and pennillion singers, and a chapter treating on the latter characteristic style of vocal recitation to the accompaniment of the harp. A cheaper edition of the collection—and which bears the title of "The Lays of my Land" ("Alawon fy ngwlad")—was subsequently issued in one volume. Mr. Bennett's remains were interred in the Churchyard of St. Michael's, Trefeglwys, on August 21.

WILLIAM CHARLES DEWBERRY died on the 15th ult., at Cambridge, where, on January 16, 1843, he was born. Formerly a chorister, solo boy, and afterwards assistant-organist at King's College, Cambridge, he became a student at the Royal Academy of Music. There he studied under Sterndale Bennett, W. G. Cusins, and Dr. Steggall. Like the late Mr. Benjamin Wells, he was an Associate of the Institution. Mr. Dewberry was organist for many years of Clare College and St. Edward's Church, Cambridge, at which University he graduated as Bachelor of Music in 1887. He took an active part in establishing several of the college musical societies and did excellent work as conductor of the Cambridge Philharmonic Society. He composed an Evening Service in E flat and other vocal music.

GEORGE BENJAMIN LISSANT, an old church organist, died on the 14th ult. Born September 22, 1827, he was a chorister at the Queen's Coronation in Westminster Abbey. In 1848 he became the first organist of St. Paul's Cathedral, Calcutta, and for the last twenty-seven years he held the post of organist of St. Augustine's Church, Queen's Gate, to which Mr. John E. West has just been appointed.

T. C. VAN MAANEN died in Dublin, on the 23rd ult., at the age of seventy-three. A native of Holland, Mr. Van Maanen came to England in 1842, and at the age of eighteen was appointed Bandmaster of the 52nd Light Infantry. Subsequent appointments as Bandmaster were 1st Royal Scots (1851), Bengal Artillery (1856), Scots Guards (1869), and Royal Irish Constabulary (1875), which office he held until his death.

The death took place on the 8th ult., at the age of fifty-six, of GEORGE TETLEY, of Woodley Road, Leeds. The deceased gentleman was for twenty-two years organist and choirmaster of St. John's Church, Leeds. He was also formerly the senior orchestral steward at the Leeds Musical Festival.

On the 8th ult., at Leitmeritz, Bohemia, V. H. ZAVERTAL, formerly of Helensburgh, N.B., father of Cavalier Zavertal, of Woolwich.

BRIEF SUMMARY OF COUNTRY AND COLONIAL NEWS.

We do not hold ourselves responsible for any opinions expressed in this summary, as all the notices are either collated from the local papers or supplied to us by correspondents.

CAPE TOWN.—On August 16 a most successful performance of Berlioz's "Faust" was given in the Good Hope Hall before a crowded audience. The chorus was exceedingly good even in the most trying passages, and great praise is due to the orchestra for the way in which they performed their part. The soloists, all of whom gave more than satisfaction, were Miss Florence Fraser, Mr. E. Branscombe, Mr. Price, Mr. T. M. Phillips, and Mr. Percy Ould. Mr. T. Barrow-Dowling is deserving of high praise for the efficient and artistic manner in which he conducted the performance.

MILL HILL (DERBY).—On the 3rd ult. the annual choir festival was held at St. Joseph's Catholic Church, when a Mass by Herr Klee, the "Mass of St. Dominic," was sung, conducted by the composer. The solos were effectively rendered by Mrs. Saunders, the Misses M. Wheatcroft and A. Byrne, Mrs. Spiek and Miss Fritz, Mr. S. T. Rodburn and Mr. Walkerdine. The singing of Haydn's chorus "The Heavens are telling" concluded the morning service. In the evening the special features were Mendelssohn's "If with all your hearts" and "O rest in the Lord," Rossi's "Tantum ergo," and Handel's "Hallelujah" Chorus. Mr. A. J. Blakemore is the choirmaster and Mr. Walter Holme the painstaking organist.

ANSWERS TO CORRESPONDENTS.

C. P. J.—(1) The history of St. Andrew's Church, Wells Street, which includes "a short account of the musical services," by Mr. Docker, is published, and we believe that copies of the book may be obtained from the printer, Mr. Sidney Riorden, Poland Street, Oxford Street, London. We hope to refer to this publication at an early opportunity. (2) The former service-books (if they are still in print) of the London Gregorian Choral Association may be obtained from the Secretary, Mr. R. A. Turner, 51, Mount Pleasant Road, Ladywell, S.E.; and those of the London Church Choir Association from Mr. W. R. B. Tann, 7, Park Place Villas, Paddington.

E. E. P.—The rule is that an accidental (so-called) placed before a note affects its pitch throughout the bar, unless, of course, the accidental should be contradicted. But it is often desirable, as a safeguard, to modify the application of this, and to make contradictions of accidentally altered notes in the bar following that in which they appear.

B. S.—Examinations in music conducted by public bodies naturally elicit more confidence, and their diplomas are of far greater value than those by private institutions or individuals. Those, for instance, of the Royal Academy of Music and Royal College of Music are of the highest repute, as are the Associated Board of the two Institutions.

C. S.—(1) The letter "i" in wind is usually pronounced as "y"—wynd. (2) The small notes should be played with those of the right hand chords, but the main notes (in the left hand) should be struck as quickly as possible afterwards. The pedal should, of course, be used in all such cases.

G. A. S.—We cannot give the names of teachers, but the Secretary of the Institution at which you desire to be examined would doubtless advise you how to proceed; but for pianoforte playing it might be difficult to "prepare thoroughly by post."

Figured Bass.—Handel's "Messiah" (full score), printed from the old Walsh plates and having a figured-bass, is still procurable from Messrs. Novello, as are also copies of Bach's works—the Church Cantatas, &c.—similarly figured-bassed.

N. A. W.—The accentuation of the word "infinite" must be governed by its musical setting. Sometimes the emphasis is on the first, and at others on the last syllable, but not on the second syllable.

A. R. C. C.—The tune, with its repeat, has evidently been composed for a hymn of special metre, of which there does not appear to be a specimen in "Hymns Ancient and Modern."

G. L. L.—The chant by Turle that you send is not a quadruple, but a double chant. It was published as long ago as March, 1852.

E. J. G.—If you are unable to take lessons, you will find Mr. Randegger's Singing Primer a useful aid in self-tuition.

Bombay.—There is a "Danse Macabre" by Liszt. We hope to refer to the other part of your question next month.

H. T. (America).—Thanks for your suggestion, which we will bear in mind and act upon as opportunity offers.

R. P. P.—You should consult a specialist about your ear trouble.

Our correspondents will oblige by writing all names as clearly as possible, as we cannot be responsible for any mistakes that may occur.

MR. C. W. FREDERICKS

(Of the Trocadero, Paris; Crystal Palace and St. James's Hall, London; and Hereford Musical Festivals. Vicar-Choral, Lichfield Cathedral).

"Mr. Charles Fredericks has sung at my house. I find he possesses a charming tenor voice of good compass and pure quality, which he uses to great advantage, particularly in oratorio music.
"Charles Gounod."

"Crystal Palace Company, London, S.E.

"I was so favourably impressed by your highly artistic rendering of the pieces which you sang at the concert here recently, that I have placed you on the list of those tenor vocalists whom I consider worthy of an occasional engagement at our very best class of concerts, and I hope that I may soon have a chance to hear you here again.
"August Manns."

Extracts from Press Notices.

"Messiah."—Truro Philharmonic Society.—"Of Mr. C. W. Fredericks, as tenor, we need hardly speak. As on former occasions, when he has appeared in Truro, he has charmed his auditory by the cultured manner in which he uses a sweet, sympathetic voice. 'Thy rebuke,' 'Behold and see,' were given with a taste and feeling which were irresistible, while his spirited rendering of 'Thou shalt break them' was beyond praise."—Royal Cornwall Gazette, March 30, 1899.

"The tenor solos were allotted to Mr. C. W. Fredericks, of Lichfield Cathedral, to renew acquaintance with whom was a source of much pleasure to many present. Mr. Fredericks was in excellent voice, and by his pathetic singing of the passion music, and his stirring rendering of 'Thou shalt break them,' he gave convincing evidence of the 'all round' character of his abilities as a vocalist."—The West Briton, March 30, 1899.

LONG EATON PARISH CHURCH FESTIVAL.

Solos from "Elijah," "St. Paul," and "Hymn of Praise."—"This was followed by Mr. Fredericks' recitative and air from 'Elijah,' 'Ye people, rend your hearts,' and 'If with all your hearts,' both being rendered in the best manner possible. . . . There is no doubt Mr. C. W. Fredericks, of Lichfield, attracted many who otherwise probably would not have attended. I have said on other occasions that a religious service is not the time for criticism from a professional point; but one cannot help realising how much the perfect technical rendering of such music adds to the impressiveness and devotional character of the words. Mendelssohn's sublime oratorio solos, rendered in the manner they were by Mr. Fredericks, have a wider and much more lasting effect than the mere reading of the words could possibly convey."—Long Eaton Pioneer, Friday, February 3, 1899.

Address, Mr. Fredericks, Vicar-Choral, Cathedral, Lichfield; or, 248, Trinity Road, Wandsworth, London, S.W.
Telegraphic address, "Fredericks, Lichfield."

CHURCH CHOIR CHANT-BOOK

A COMPLETE SET OF CHANTS ADAPTED TO THE BOOK OF PSALMS
SPECIALLY SELECTED FOR PAROCHIAL USE

EDITED BY

J. STAINER, M.A., Mus. Doc., Oxon.

FORMERLY ORGANIST OF MAGDALEN COLLEGE

L. S. TUCKWELL, M.A.

RECTOR OF STANDLAKE, FORMERLY PRECENTOR OF THE SAME COLLEGE.

PREFACE.

Care has been taken in this Collection to make use of those Chants only whose reciting notes are well within the compass of ordinary voices. To all the voice-parts attention has been paid in this respect. But some beautiful and useful Chants which do not fulfil these conditions have been either given as alternatives or placed in the Appendix.

Due consideration has been given to the sequence of key in successive Chants. A separate Chant has been assigned to each of the 150 Psalms, two or three to the longer Psalms, such as 78th and 89th, one to each section of the 119th, and one to the Venite for each morning of the month, making in all, with the Appendix, 276 different Chants. Any of these may be used for the Canticles, but, generally speaking, a single Chant will be found most suitable for the Magnificat, and a double chant for the Benedictus and Nunc dimittis. In the Te Deum the following arrangement is suggested: a single chant for verses 1—13, a double chant for verses 14—25, and a single chant for verses 26 to end. The division of the words of the Te Deum, as suggested above, is that which has already been adopted in the Cathedral Psalter. The Benedicite may be sung to three single chants, a change being made at v. 18 and v. 27. The appropriation of each Chant to its particular Psalm has not been made experimentally; in a large number of cases, the Chants have been sung for many years to the very Psalms to which they are here attached, to the satisfaction and edification of choirs with which the Editors have been associated. As there are many who desire to have only one Chant associated with each Psalm, the same Chants are given for the thirtieth and thirty-first days; but an alternative set for the use of those who desire a change will be found in the Appendix.

THE TIMES.

Throughout the entire oratorio hardly an effect was missed in the choral writing, and here above all Professor Parker proved himself a master. His treatment of the chorus is remarkable, yet there is none of the common modern tendency to strain or even to seek after effect. His effects come quite naturally, and he works up to superb climaxes with perfect ease. Precisely the same remarks apply, too, to his writing for quartets. There are no less than three quartets in the work, and it is no easy matter to single out any one of them for especial praise. . . . The effect produced by this particularly interesting work was splendid. There is no question of the great gifts of the composer. His technical knowledge of his art is very full; evidently he knows the effect he requires and how to obtain it. It is sincerely to be hoped that his later and more important oratorio will not have to wait until it is seven years old before we hear it in England, for we have abundant room for a composer so fertile in melody and so rich in his effects.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

Here is a composition thoroughly well put together by the hand of an efficient artist. The effects aimed at are not obscure, the method adopted to reach them never leaves the observer in doubt as to its purport and intention. In fact, while the music goes on we cannot but suspect that if it fail in the points just indicated the fault must lie in our own lack of perception. Let it stand, therefore, that as a constructive and technical musician Professor Parker is entitled to high approval. This conceded, there remains the even more serious matter of style, ideas, and truth, as well as power of expression. . . . Let me tell how, speaking generally, the American musician rises with ease and certainty nearly, if not quite, to the height of his great argument. He does this by strength of hold on the subject matter, by perception of its spirit, and by facility in giving full expression to both in the terms of his art. Rarely does the music drop below the level of the text, or follow the argument on flagging wings, and this, added to many melodious themes, picturesque orchestration, and clever, well-wrought counterpoint, marks the work as one with which, if justice be done, we shall certainly become better acquainted.

STANDARD.

Mr. Parker opens his setting with a short introduction, based upon themes which, in the course of the work, acquire significance. The chorus enters fortissimo in unison while the full orchestra thunders out the first subject, of dignified and Brahms-like character. Seven bars later the choir, in four parts, utter pianissimo the word "Vigilemus." Similar striking contrasts of tonal force impart considerable dramatic intensity to the number, which is well designed, and creates a favourable impression. . . . His cleverness is further shown in the next number, a chorus, which contains a well-worked-out fugue, terminating with a climax of great dignity and power. . . . The orchestration, albeit at times old-fashioned, is picturesque and effective. It is well laid out to support the voices, and the latter are written for with manifest avoidance of unnecessary difficulties. . . . It shows an earnestness of purpose and a command of resource that beget esteem and excite pleasant anticipations of future compositions from the same pen.

MORNING POST.

The work opens with an orchestral prelude, in which the principal subject of the work is early announced. Towards the end a descending chromatic passage on a pedal bass is heard, which subsequently recurs on several occasions as the work proceeds. The opening chorus is one of the best numbers. It is well designed, presents admirable contrasts, and sustains attention. . . . A clever bass solo, "Spe modo vivitur," in which varieties of rhythm are employed with remarkable skill and good results. The chorus which follows contains a well-developed fugue, which is worked up to an imposing climax. This is succeeded by an aria for soprano, "O bona patria," of a graceful character, but reminiscent of Dvorák's "Spectre's Bride." . . . A tastefully-written tenor solo, "Urbs Syon Aurea," opens the second part of the work, and is attractively orchestrated after the style of Gounod. A well-written and vigorous double chorus is followed by the alto solo, "Gens duce splendida," in which the composer is heard at his best. An unaccompanied chorus in strict style provides efficient variety, and the final number, a chorus with superimposed quartet, brings the work to a brilliant conclusion.

DAILY GRAPHIC.

Mr. Parker has composed an oratorio on a grand scale of striking merit and remarkable effectiveness. . . . Whatever the sources of his inspiration, however, there can be no question of his musicianship. He handles the old forms of figure and aria with consummate ease. His melodies are full of sensuous beauty, and he combines them without any suspicion of effort. Altogether his oratorio must be pronounced highly effective, free from dryness or from any smell of the lamp, yet evidencing consummate scholarship.

PALL MALL GAZETTE.

Well, I like Mr. Parker's "Hora Novissima." I like it, frankly, without hesitation and without the smallest reluctance. . . . The man was full of ideas and imagination, and, perhaps, with lack of stern criticism and careful sifting, but certainly with perfect gaiety, good humour, and courage, he set them all down in due order. To deny the thing originality is to avoid the work altogether. It has the best originality in the world, that of being alive in itself, of possessing liberality, freedom, extraordinary openness of sentiment. I do not know where else to look in quite recent music for just these qualities.

MORNING LEADER.

Prof. Parker has given us a work which, with all its limitations, its slight old-fashioned orchestration, and its occasional straightforward obviousness, should be a welcome addition to the choral répertoire.

GUARDIAN.

The cantata is obviously the work of a thoroughly capable and experienced musician. Professor Parker handles his orchestral forces with an easy mastery, and he writes for the voice with quite remarkable fluency and effectiveness. The orchestral introduction is very richly scored, and contains a chromatic passage written over a pedal point of great interest and beauty, which is effectively introduced in the first chorus at the words "improba puniat" . . . We have nothing but praise for the bass air "Spe modo vivitur," which, with the glamour of Mr. Plunket Greene's voice, produced a great and instantaneous effect. It is admirably expressive, and is worked up to a peroration in the major key of very moving beauty. . . . The tenor air, "Urbs Syon Aurea," to which Mr. Lloyd did full justice, is very rich in melody, and written with wonderful skill for the voice. In the concluding number a long orchestral prelude heralds the appearance of a fine, manly theme, on which a most effective fugue is constructed, and which at the climax of the work is sung in unison fortissimo by the whole chorus, accompanied on the orchestra by an augmented version of the melodious subject which is associated throughout the work with the Heavenly Jerusalem. . . . The Worcester Festival of 1899 will long be memorable for having introduced to this country such a notable example of American music.

BIRMINGHAM DAILY POST.

Speaking generally, the work exhibits high musicianship throughout. The orchestra is handled with freedom and mastery; the part-writing is vocal and melodious; the solos are grateful; and though Gounod, Dvorák, Wagner, and even Handel and Bach have inspired the composer here and there, evidences of distinct individuality are not wanting. What master, indeed, does not reflect in his early writings the ideas absorbed from the work of his predecessors? . . . Though no audible evidence of its success could be awarded in the cathedral, one felt that "Hora Novissima" had made its mark. It may be useful to add that the work took just seventy minutes in performance.

BIRMINGHAM DAILY GAZETTE.

The work itself may be described as sound and musicianly; attractive alike to the unskilled and to the connoisseur, and, but for the Latin words, calculated to be popular and sung everywhere by societies both large and small. The music being scholarly, it is perforce, and in a certain sense, old-fashioned, but the term implies no censure.

WORCESTER HERALD.

The cantata, or oratorio, is a welcome addition to our répertoire of sacred music. It contains much bold and effective writing, and is a good deal unlike most sacred music of the present day. It is almost jovial in certain parts, and is a little wanting in the solemnity which we generally associate with oratorio music. But there is much that is striking and original, and over the whole there is spread a spirit of freshness and brightness which is very charming.

THE LIGHT OF LIFE

(LUX CHRISTI)

A SHORT ORATORIO

FOR SOLI, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA

THE WORDS WRITTEN AND ARRANGED BY THE

REV. E. CAPEL-CURE

THE MUSIC COMPOSED BY

EDWARD ELGAR.

Vocal Score, price Two Shillings and Sixpence.
String Parts, 13s. 6d.; Full Score and Wind Parts, MS.

THE TIMES.

It is undeniably the work of a composer not only well cultivated and trained in his art, but also gifted in no small degree. . . . On a first hearing the most impressive pieces seemed to be the first chorus, "Seek Him," and that entitled "Light out of darkness." In both of them the handling of the orchestra is masterly, and in the former, and again in the short fugal number, "The wisdom of their wise men," the composer is seen at his best as a writer for chorus.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

Circumstances have divided "The Light of Life" into two unequal parts—unequal, that is to say, in point of dimension. One of these consists of the "Meditation," now widely known as "Lux Christi." This Prelude has entered into the musical life of the country, and is everywhere accepted in a spirit of necessary appreciation as well as of pure enjoyment. . . . The orchestral "Meditation" revealed to discerning eyes the quality of a musician who had come to stay, and whose "King Olaf," shortly following, opened the public ear to anything he might choose to produce later on. Mr. Elgar is now his own master, sufficiently trusted to do as he pleases, and sure of a respectful audience.

STANDARD.

Mr. Elgar has not adopted any special style of composition, and he seems to be able to write fluently and freshly in any way he chooses. The vocal part-writing should be agreeable to the singers, and the orchestration is masterly without being too ambitious. In short, "The Light of Life" is a work of great merit. . . . The beautiful instrumental opening, styled a "Meditation," has made its way into our concert-rooms, and there are several other numbers in the work which should save it from that neglect which is the fate of so large a percentage of Festival novelties.

DAILY CHRONICLE.

His instrumentation is ingenious and picturesque, without being unduly intricate; his solos are extremely grateful to the interpreters and his choral writing is fresh and spirited. These are great recommendations for a work of this description. . . . The introductory orchestral "Meditation," which so speedily made its way with the lovers of genuine sacred music, was well played, and for sustained pathos and devotional intensity Mr. Lloyd's reading of the Prayer of the blind man could not have been improved upon.

MORNING POST.

Rehearing of the work deepens esteem for its merits. The opening "Meditation" for orchestra is a beautiful movement, and the choral numbers are pervaded with an earnestness of thought and a loftiness of purpose that cause the music to acquire increased interest with more intimate acquaintance. In particular, these remarks apply to the settings of the words of Christ, and especially the solo, "I am the Good Shepherd."

DAILY GRAPHIC.

The Worcester authorities paid a substantial compliment to Mr. Elgar in electing to repeat his oratorio written for the 1896 festival. It deserved the honour and stood the test of a rehearing. He has surpassed it since, but it is still remarkable for its freshness of melodic idea, for its skilful use of representative themes, and for its brilliant orchestration.

PALL MALL GAZETTE.

Mr. Elgar has utilized an artless and unassuming form of libretto with amazing skill and intelligence, has indeed shown himself capable of doing as much with it as it can reasonably be expected that anybody could do. The opening "Meditation," indeed, now takes its rank among the finely contemplative passages of musical thought. . . . The eight-part chorus, "And the eyes of the blind," with its intricate weaving of phrase into phrase, as though one were groping sadly and slowly in darkness, until the whole emerges into the perfectly open simplicity of the common chord, is one of the few successful tone pictures that have been written since the death of Wagner. . . The chorus, "Light out of darkness," is another instance in which Mr. Elgar's noble technique is allied to truth of feeling and singular fervour of inspiration. . . . The fact is that in "The Light of Life" Mr. Elgar wrote a work which belongs doubtless to his younger days, but which will have the charm of lightness, of freshness, of frank emotion to balance its merit against the greater, the severer virtues of a later period.

A NEW EDITION OF

FOR SOPRANO SOLO, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA

COMPOSED BY

C. LEE WILLIAMS.

Vocal Score, Price One Shilling and Sixpence.
String Parts, 4s. 6d.; Full Score and Wind Parts, MS.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

Mr. Williams has since made important changes in orchestration, as well as in substituting new music for that which appeared to him unsatisfactory. All these "second thoughts" have turned out to be best, and now the work is an adequate expression of joy in harvest. The gem of the piece is a soprano solo, "How sang the birds in those sweet springtime days." Here Mr. Williams shows the grace and charm of Haydn, together with that good old master's sweet simplicity. There is no mistaking the atmosphere of the music. It is that of the sunlit country, vocal with the song of birds and fragrant with the scent of flowers. A delightful fancy plays over this page, and Madame Amy Sherwin gave it chaste and restrained expression. The numbers, owing to the necessarily imposed time limit, are not largely developed, but they follow each other in well judged variety, from the tender contralto solo, "His loving kindness never endeth," to the sonorous chorus, "Then came the summer ardently."

STANDARD.

It is admirably adapted for ordinary church harvest festivals. Its most pleasing number is the soprano solo, "He sent the early rain," the accompaniment of which is extremely picturesque. The male chorus, "The chilling breath of frost," is also well written, and provides effective contrast.

MORNING POST.

The text, by Mr. Joseph Bennett, may be described as a paraphrase of the Psalms commonly sung at church harvest festivals, and for such occasions the music has manifestly been designed. It is laid out for soprano solo, chorus, and orchestra, and makes small executive demands. The chief soprano solo, "He sent the early rain," is grateful to the singer, and has a very picturesquely scored accompaniment. The choruses for male voices supply a contrast with others written for the full choir.

DAILY GRAPHIC.

Though it is somewhat disappointing that Mr. Williams has not given us something entirely new, his unpretentious and pleasant work is none the less acceptable. He would seem to have had in his mind the requirement of church festivals, for not only is his music straightforward and devoid of any great difficulty, but it is for the most part couched in a light and agreeable vein.

DAILY CHRONICLE.

His "Harvest Song," with a setting of words by Mr. Joseph Bennett, is both pastoral and devotional in tone. It consists of a meditative orchestral introduction, some choruses, three solos for soprano voice, and the old chorale tune "Now thank we all our God." Avoiding elaboration or complexity, the composer has contented himself with devising simple effects, telling as well in the church as in the concert-room, so that it can be turned to account for harvest festivals. The choruses are quite within the means of a choir of average ability and intelligence, and the congregation can join (as in the performance of Bach's "Passion" music) in the chorale which closes the first part, and in the Doxology bringing the work to a termination. That it will be acceptable in many quarters there can be no doubt.

GUARDIAN.

Abounding as it does in conventional devices for producing a "pastoral" effect, it will be a perfect godsend to an ambitious country choir requiring a new anthem for their harvest home.

PLAIDY'S

(Copyright Edition).

We beg to announce our having made an important reduction in the selling price of that standard text-book for pianoforte players, viz.:

Plaidy's "Technical Studies," of which we are the original publishers and holders of the copyright.

This celebrated work embodies, as is well known, the vast experience and eminent teaching qualifications of the great Leipzig specialist, by whom it has been repeatedly revised and added to, in fresh editions, during his lifetime. As a matter of fact, the first English edition of "Technische Studien" was published by us in 1857; while the third, COMPLETELY REVISED, GREATLY IMPROVED AND AUGMENTED EDITION, issued in 1869 (five years previous to Plaidy's death), represents the standard work in its finally improved state, as left by its author. This, then, is the only authorised and complete edition, published by BREITKOPF & HÄRTEL. Since, however, the firm's copyright of the earliest edition, of 1857, may be assumed to have now expired, it is important to point out that whatever issue of Plaidy's "Technical Studies" may be placed before the public, in other quarters, can only be, legally, a reproduction of this early and, therefore, INCOMPLETE edition of the work.

In order to meet the probable competition of such RE-ISSUES OF AN OBSOLETE EDITION, with the complete and mature work published by us (Third edition, in handsome FORMAT, with English or Continental fingering), we have decided to reduce the price from 9s. to 2s. net; a decision which will doubtless meet with the appreciation of the musical profession, by whom our standard edition of Plaidy's "Technische Studien" has long been recognised as an indispensable adjunct to the technique of pianoforte playing.

VARIATIONS
EDWARD ELGAR.
(Op. 36.)

Full Score and Orchestral Parts (in the Press).
Arranged for Pianoforte Solo by the Composer.
Price Three Shillings and Sixpence.

THE TIMES.

It is exceedingly clever, often charming, and always original, and excellently worked out. The composer was warmly applauded at its close.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

Well wrought and ingenious are all these variations, exhibiting in a very high degree Mr. Elgar's fertility of resource and the ample freedom of his method. As those who had previous experience of their author expected, the variations are quite modern in style and texture. . . . will certainly add to the composer's reputation.

DAILY NEWS.

The sections entitled "Nimrod" and "Dorabella" were much applauded, and also the last movement, which has now been revised, although the alterations do not appear to be very great.

MORNING POST.

The variations are all remarkably clever, and some of them are distinctly humorous. The orchestral treatment is throughout ingenious. Mr. Elgar was called on to the platform at the conclusion of his interesting work, and loudly applauded. . . . The matter since added at the conclusion of the last variation was heard to-night for the first time, and was a great improvement, imparting increased brilliancy and importance to the work.

DAILY CHRONICLE.

Mr. Edward Elgar conducted his admirably written "Variations on an Original Theme," produced at a Richter concert in London in the summer. The work was then warmly approved, and its merits are increasingly conspicuous on a second hearing. The variations that were special favourites this evening were the ninth and tenth. Upon the brilliant Finale, with its bold march, Mr. Elgar was also highly complimented.

DAILY GRAPHIC.

Mr. Elgar's new work scored a genuine success. It exhibits most happily his great inventive power and his striking ability in handling his orchestra. He has here produced a series of miniatures, drawn and coloured with the utmost cleverness and originality. Some are tender, some are graceful, and some are humorous, but all reveal the touch of a master. . . . The variations are brimful of character and humour. Since the first performance the composer has rewritten the coda, and given it greater importance, much to the advantage of the work as a whole. The performance was a fine one, and confirmed one in the belief that this is not only Mr. Elgar's masterpiece, but one of the most brilliant orchestral compositions that have been produced in the British school, or in any school for that matter, for many years past.

ECHO.

They are of commanding merit, of comprehensive charm, and well deserve to take a permanent position in our repertory of orchestral music.

GLOBE.

The variations are always interesting, well-contrasted, and scored with a real sense of tone-colour, and some of them are quite beautiful by themselves, apart from all considerations of form and structure.

GUARDIAN.

Mr. Elgar may therefore be very warmly congratulated on the unqualified success of his work, which was given the high compliment of receiving its first interpretation from Dr. Richter and his famous band. . . . The variations are extremely well contrasted, and the orchestration, though masterly and effective throughout, is always treated by the composer as a means to an end, and not as an end in itself. . . . The whole work will add greatly to Mr. Elgar's already high reputation, and it is to be hoped that an opportunity will soon be given of hearing it again. . . . All the favourable impressions produced at the first performance were amply confirmed on this occasion, and it would not, in our judgment, be an exaggeration to say that Mr. Elgar is the most eminent master of orchestral effect which our country has produced, with the possible exception of Sir Arthur Sullivan.

ALFRED R. GAUL'S CANTATAS.

PRODUCED AT THE NORWICH MUSICAL FESTIVAL, OCTOBER 4, 1893.

"The result, in the present case, leaves no doubt that into all the places which know his previous compositions 'Una' will find a way and become as much a favourite as its forerunners. . . . Mr. Gaul considers before all things the elegance and symmetry of his melodic phrases."—Musical Times.

"We believe that Mr. Gaul has attained greater popularity with small English provincial choral societies than any other composer, living or dead."—London Daily Graphic.

†THE TEN VIRGINS

Third Edition. Eleventh and Twelfth Thousand.
This Edition contains the additional Soprano air "Sun of my soul."

"The work will certainly go through Saxondom in the wake of its predecessors from the same pen."—London Daily Telegraph.

"Must attain popularity wherever heard. Infinitely superior to any previous effort of the composer."—Liverpool Daily Courier.

"A distinct advance upon any of its predecessors."—Birmingham Daily Post.

PRODUCED WITH THE UTMOST SUCCESS BY THE BIRMINGHAM FESTIVAL CHORAL SOCIETY.

*JOAN OF ARC

Staff Edition. Twenty-sixth to Thirtieth Thousand.

"The Exeter Oratorio Society last night achieved a brilliant success, and it may safely be said, without fear of exaggeration, that never before have they performed a work more satisfactory to themselves or more interesting to the audience than 'Joan of Arc.'"—Western Times.

"One of the most delightful Concerts ever given by the South Shields Choral Society was that of last evening, when the principal piece was 'Joan of Arc.' We cannot speak too highly of Mr. Gaul's work, which is of the most interesting description, and will doubtless soon be a favourite with choral societies."—Shields Daily News.

Fifth and Sixth Thousand.

PRODUCED AT THE CRYSTAL PALACE, JULY 9, 1892.

*ISRAEL IN THE WILDERNESS

"The work was given under Mr. Gaul's own direction by some 3,000 singers, accompanied by the Palace orchestra. Mr. Gaul has presented in no previous work better characteristics or more successful efforts than are to be found in 'Israel in the Wilderness.' The popular composer was enthusiastically cheered at the close of the performance."—Musical News.

The above Cantatas have been specially planned to meet the requirements of Musical Societies, the greater portion being choral.

Price, paper cover, 2s. 6d.; paper boards, 3s.; cloth, gilt, 4s.; Tonic Sol-fa, 1s.; Vocal Parts, each 1s. Words only, *7s. 6d.; †5s. per 100.

"No better treatise has been issued. Its comprehensiveness is really wonderful."—Musical News.

"Such a work by such a master of his subject must prove very useful to many choirmasters."—Salisbury Journal.

"The author deservedly holds a high reputation as a skilful choir-trainer. His views will be received with not a little benefit to those who adopt his methods."—Musical Times.

HUDDERSFIELD GLEE AND MADRIGAL SOCIETY'S CONCERT, October 10, 1899.

"Mr. John Browning has the advantage of a voice of extensive compass and a quality so rich and musical as to be powerful without being heavy or coarse in the least degree. It is, too, so well cultured as to be easily amenable, under his artistic method, to the requirements of all classes of music. He possesses also a fine musicianly ability and dramatic instinct and power, and delivers his words clearly and with a correct expression of their varied shades of meaning. His singing of two Hungarian songs, 'Shepherd, see thy horse's foaming mane,' and 'Had a horse, a finer no one ever saw' (by Korbay), was remarkably clever. . . . His ability for translating effectively high-class music which has both intellectual depth and the purest musical beauty was shown in the distinctively fine style with which he sang the dramatic ballad 'Die Vätergruft' (P. Cornelius). Mr. Browning's singing of this gem of dramatic music was full of musical and expressive depth. . . . The antipodes of this lovely pathetic work was the buffo song 'I'm a roamer' (Mendelssohn), in which, at the requisite high speed rarely attempted by singers of the song, he sang the rollicking words and music with remarkable fluency, tunefulness, and sense of humour. He responded to an encore by singing very expressively 'One and Twenty' (Fraser)."—Huddersfield Examiner, October 11, 1899.

"Mr. John Browning was in good voice, and his renderings of two of Korbay's Hungarian songs were real artistic treats. The ballad 'Die Vätergruft,' with a delightfully sung vocal accompaniment from the choir, was another magnificent dramatic effort worthy the highest praise. For a clever and spirited rendering of 'I'm a roamer' Mr. Browning was encored and responded with a pathetic little song, 'One and Twenty.'"—Huddersfield Chronicle, October 11, 1899.

JOHN THOMAS.

The antiquity of the harp admits of no disputation. The names of Jubal and King David are inseparably associated with the instrument. David was in all probability the most skilful harpist of his time. On a certain memorable occasion in the life of King Saul, the harp, in David's "cunning" hands, was put to the test as an instrument possessing neurotic potentialities. "Behold now," said the servants of King Saul to their regal master, "an evil spirit from God troubleth thee. Let our lord now command thy servants which are before thee, to seek out a man who is a cunning player upon the harp, and it shall come to pass, when the evil spirit from God is upon thee, that he shall play with his hand, and that thou shalt be well." Saul consented, and David was duly summoned. The prophecy of the servants was fulfilled in these words: "And it came to pass when the evil spirit from God was upon Saul, that David took an harp, and played with his hand: so Saul was refreshed, and was well, and the evil spirit departed from him." The Hebrew Psalter teems with familiar references to the harp, thus showing that the instrument was an indispensable adjunct to the religious life of the nation. Moreover, the peculiar veneration with which it was regarded during the Jewish era continued under the new dispensation. One of the most striking references thereto is that of St. John the Apostle, the seer of Patmos, who, in terms of poetic beauty and grandeur of expression, says: "And I heard a voice from heaven as the voice of many waters, and as the voice of a great thunder: and I heard the voice of harpers harping upon their harps."

The ancient Greeks took delight in the harp and the music thereof. Homer, in the ninth book of his "Iliad," gives the following description of the instrument when referring to the embassy sent by Agamemnon to Achilles during his retirement after he had quitted the Grecian camp in disgust:—

> Amused, at ease, the godlike man they found,
> Pleased with the solemn harp's harmonious sound,
> (The well wrought harp from conquered Thebæ came,
> Of polish'd silver was its costly frame)
> With this he soothes his angry soul, and sings
> The immortal deeds of heroes and of Kings.

THE HARP IN OLDEN TIMES.

Leaving the Greek poet and coming nearer home, we find that so long ago as 160 B.C. Blegwryd ab Seisyllt, King of Britain, was credited with being a good musician and a performer on the harp to boot, so much so that he was designated "the God of Music." Two historical instances are on record showing the strategic uses to which harpers in disguise were put. In the fifth century, when Colgrin was besieged in the city of York by King Arthur, Badulph assumed the character of a harper and thereby gained admission to the beleaguered city in order to consult his brother. King Alfred (A.D. 878) pursued similar tactics when he penetrated into the Danish camp to discover the counsels of his foes. And in the tenth century Anlaff, the Danish King of Northumberland, adopted the same subterfuge with King Athelstan. Dressed as a minstrel "he sang so sweetly before the royal tent, and at the same time touched his harp with such exquisite skill, that he was invited to enter, after which he was dismissed with a valuable present"! Very neatly done, King Anlaff. Thus it will be seen that the harp was looked upon as something more than a highly respectable instrument—indeed, 'twas an instrument fit for kings to set vibrating with their royal touch.

The Venerable Bede gives some very interesting information in regard to it in these Islands during the seventh century. The harp was so generally played in Britain that at entertainments it was customary to hand it from one to another; and "the Venerable" mentions one such guest who, ashamed that he could not play, thereupon stole away lest he should unhappily display his incompetence.

The Welsh people can lay claim to it as their national instrument from time immemorial. In such honour was the harp held in Wales that a slave might not practise it. To be able to play upon it was an indispensable qualification of a gentleman, and a harp could not be seized for debt. Moreover, a professor of this favourite instrument enjoyed many privileges: his lands were free and his person sacred! The musically-descended scion of these harpists of the Principality, one who has been placed at the head of Welsh music in these days, forms the subject of this biographical sketch.

John Thomas was born on St. David's Day (March 1), 1826, at Bridgend, Glamorganshire. He showed remarkable musical talent at a very early age. When he was only six years old he was quite a skilful piccoloist. His father belonged to an amateur reed and brass band, and on the occasion of a county election the services of this instrumental force were called into requisition, doubtless to entice apathetic voters to hasten to the poll. Six-year-old Master Thomas, clad in a pair of "white ducks," marched bravely along with the rest, playing his piccolo with electioneering vigour, if not shrillness. After a time the band was disbanded. Thereupon Mr. Thomas bought for his son a harp from the widow of Jones, the blind harper of Nottage. This Mr. Jones, of the large family of that name, is known to fame as the composer of the lovely melody of "Y Ferch o'r Scer" ("The Maid of Sker"). With this purchase came the turning-point in young John Thomas's life. Who knows how much he owes indirectly to old blind Jones of Nottage! The boy became simply infatuated with his new possession. He practised with passionate enthusiasm—from early morn to dewy eve.

AN EISTEDDFODIC PRIZE-WINNER.

The Eisteddfod! How often has that much-abused institution been the first stepping-stone to fame of clever young Welshmen! It was so in the case of John Thomas. At the age of eleven he competed at the Abergavenny Eisteddfod for one of four triple harps offered as prizes to the best players thereupon. Many competitors entered, of whom John Thomas was the youngest. To the great astonishment of all, himself included, Master John Thomas, aged eleven, was declared the winner of the best harp. No wonder that to this day he treasures that old Abergavenny instrument with an affectionate veneration. This success did not spoil him: it indicated his life-work. The young piccolo-player of Bridgend determined to become a harpist.

RATIONS AT THE ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

He found a true benefactor in Ada, Countess of Lovelace, Byron's only daughter. "The Countess," recalls Mr. Thomas, "adopted me, artistically speaking. She paid my fees at the Royal Academy of Music, which institution I entered in September, 1840—when I was fourteen—and where I remained as a student for nearly six years. I was a boarder at Tenterden Street and wore the Academy uniform, which was not unlike a page boy's livery. In fact, on one occasion when I strolled into the Pantheon in Oxford Street, the beadle said to me: 'We don't allow page-boys in 'ere." The food at the Academy was not over-abundant, and the butter was only upon a scraping acquaintance with the bread. In this connection it may not be without interest to quote from a very amusing history of the Academy contributed by Mr. Frederick Corder to the defunct Overture. In 1841—the year after John Thomas entered as a student—we learn that Lord Burghersh, the father and general factotum of the Academy in those days, made a thorough investigation of the housekeeping accounts, which had been very extravagant. Mr. Corder says: "A Report was drawn up shewing how a number of economies might be instituted and fixing an allowance of victuals per head, a very liberal one. It consisted of ¾-lb. meat, 1 lb. of bread, 1½ oz. of butter, 1 oz. of cheese, 1 pint of milk, and 1 lb. of potatoes, on which substantial daily portion the students ought to have grown fat. Tea and coffee were expensive luxuries in those days, it should be remembered, and were therefore treated as extras, to be provided by the consumers themselves." Amongst the fellow-students of John Thomas at Tenterden Street were Walter Macfarren (who was "a day boy"), C. W. Doyle, the late H. C. Lunn, formerly editor of The Musical Times, and the late Brinley Richards.

"I worked very hard," says Mr. Thomas, "during my Academy days, much harder, I am afraid, than students do now. One of my fellow-students, the late Charles Fowler, afterwards of Torquay, used to get up at four o'clock in the morning to practise. I followed his example, and both of us, each covered with a blanket—for the rooms were bitterly cold—used to be at work at that early matutinal hour. My professor for the harp—my principal study—was Balsir Chatterton, and I was a pupil of C. J. Read for pianoforte. I studied harmony, counterpoint, and composition first with Charles Lucas and subsequently under Cipriani Potter, who was a pupil of Beethoven.

A BEETHOVEN STORY.

In order to induce his pupils to persevere in the study of counterpoint, Potter used to tell us an interesting anecdote about the composer of the C minor Symphony. Potter went to Vienna to study composition under Beethoven. Upon his first visit to the great composer to arrange for his lessons, Beethoven said: "You must also take lessons in counterpoint from Albrechtsberger," which he did. After a time, Potter said to Beethoven: "Albrechtsberger says that I need not study counterpoint any longer"; upon which Beethoven replied: "Tell him from me that he is an old flatterer! He did not keep me long enough at it."

The student days of John Thomas were by no means unproductive in regard to composition. He wrote a Harp Concerto in B flat, with orchestral accompaniment, which was not only well received, but which made a very favourable impression. In addition to a symphony, several overtures, and quartets, he composed two operas—one entitled "Alfred the Great" and the other was on a Spanish subject—all of which were included in the programmes of the Academy concerts. He was by no means an idle student. To complete his record at the "old place" in Tenterden Street: Mr. Thomas was successively elected an Associate, a Sub-Professor, a Professor, and a Fellow of his alma mater. For several years he has been a member of its Committee of Management. Thus he has known the venerable walls of the Academy as student and professor for nearly sixty years! This length of service must surely beat the record.

Upon the completion of his pupilage at the Academy, Mr. Thomas speedily became a distinguished performer upon the instrument of his choice. In 1851 he became a member of the orchestra of Her Majesty's Opera, under the conductorship of Balfe, and played throughout that brilliant operatic season of the great Exhibition year, when Jenny Lind was at the height of her fame.

CONTINENTAL TOURS.

In the autumn of the same year he began those annual continental tours which brought him so much fame during the next ten years of his career. He first visited Vienna, where the Earl of Westmoreland (formerly Lord Burghersh) was Her Majesty's Ambassador. The Earl gladly welcomed one of his old Academy boys, and showed him much kindness in that music-loving city, where he met Otto Nicolai, Czerny, and Staudigl. In Dresden he played to the King and Queen of Saxony, and at Berlin before the Prussian Court. On the latter occasion, after he had finished his first solo, Meyerbeer (the director of the Court concerts), before the King and Queen, walked up to the young Welshman in the centre of the room and warmly shook him by the hand, at the same time paying him the most flattering compliments. The King of Prussia presented him with a costly diamond ring.

KINGS AND QUEENS.

From Berlin he went to Hanover, with a letter from the Prussian Court to the King, who received him in the most flattering manner, which he recounts in the following words: "After having had the honour of dining with their majesties the King and Queen, conversing in the most homely manner over a cup of tea about the peculiarities of the Welsh language, and teaching the King to pronounce some of the letters of its alphabet, I played to them several solos in the course of the evening. At the conclusion his majesty, after having highly complimented me, said: 'I notice a remarkable peculiarity in your playing, which I have never found in any other performer upon the harp: it is that your execution in both hands is absolutely equal.' Upon which I replied: 'Your majesty, I think I can account for that. As a boy I commenced playing on a Welsh harp, the strings of which, being placed on the right side of the comb, necessitate its being held on the left shoulder and played upon with the left hand in the treble and the right hand in the bass; otherwise the comb would intercept the view of the strings. On entering the Royal Academy of Music as a student, I had to change the position—to hold the instrument on the right shoulder, to play with the right hand in the treble and the left hand in the bass, as, on the pedal harp, the strings are on the left side of the comb.' His majesty replied: 'You will give me some credit for having made the discovery.' His majesty asked me whether I had ever played before the Queen of England, when I replied that I had not yet had that honour. Upon leaving Hanover I received a handsome present from the King, accompanied with a letter to our Queen, which secured for me the honour of my first appearance at Buckingham Palace."

In addition to many costly gifts from Royal personages, Mr. Thomas returned to England "loaded with gratifying marks of attention from the most distinguished artists from all parts of the Continent." Mr. Davison, in an editorial postscript to an article in the Musical World (April 10, 1852), recording the successes of Mr. Thomas, thus characteristically expressed himself: "After this, let us hear no more of the hospitality of our continental neighbours, co-art lovers, and co-fiddlers, co-composers, and co-connoisseurs in general.—Ed., M.W."

At a concert given by him soon after his return to London, Mr. Thomas was assisted by Madame (now Lady) Macfarren, the late Herr Staudigl, vocalists; Miss Kate Loder (now Lady Thompson) and Herr Ernst Pauer, pianists. In the same year (on May 3, 1852) he performed a Harp Concertino in E flat, of his own composition, at a Philharmonic concert. Mr. Davison, in recording the event, said: "The concertino of Mr. Thomas (lately a student in the Royal Academy of Music), a promising and talented musician, is a work of considerable merit. It is well written for the instrument—one by no means suited for combination with the orchestra—and instrumented with decided ability. Mr. Thomas is one of our most skilful performers on the harp; and nothing could be more satisfactory than his performance, both as to mechanism and style. He was received with distinguished favour."

THE FIRST CONCERT OF WELSH MUSIC IN LONDON.

At the Eisteddfod of 1861, held at Aberdare, Mr. Thomas, with all the ancient formalities appertaining to the Gorsedd, was invested with the title of "Pencerdd Gwalia," which, being interpreted, means "Chief Minstrel of Wales." In the following year (1862) he published his valuable collection of Welsh Melodies. On July 4 of that year he gave an important concert of Welsh music at St. James's Hall, the first of its kind in London, which clearly demonstrated to the dwellers in the Metropolis that Welsh music was not only worthy of attention, but that in the hands of Mr. Thomas the music of the Principality was in the safe keeping of one of her most gifted sons. A chorus of 400 voices was accompanied by a band of twenty harps. The late Madame Edith Wynne made her London début at that concert, "which," said Mr. Davison, "was not only one of the most successful, but also one of the most interesting of the season. St. James's Hall was literally 'crammed,' and the audience included a large number of professors and amateurs." Amongst others, Thalberg was present, and after hearing the Welsh air

"David of the White Rock ("Davydd y Garreg Wen"), played as a harp solo by the concert-giver, he exclaimed: "Il-y-a l'âme de la musique dans cette melodie là." He subsequently made a transcription of the melody for the pianoforte, and included it in his well-known work, "L'Art du chant appliqué au Piano." Since 1862 Mr. Thomas has given annually a harp concert in St. James's Hall.

AN AVERTED CATASTROPHE.

In 1863 his dramatic cantata "Llewelyn" was performed, for the first time, at the Swansea Eisteddfod, for which it had been expressly composed, the English words of the libretto by Thomas Oliphant (honorary secretary to the Madrigal Society) and the Welsh words by Talhairn, the celebrated Welsh poet. An incident occurred on the evening for which the performance was announced (September 3), which might have been attended by very serious consequences. Mr. Thomas's native town (Bridgend) is within twenty-five miles of Swansea; and his townspeople arrived at the Eisteddfod in their thousands, so that they crowded the building in every part. The gallery alone contained four thousand souls, and the iron girders which supported it were giving way under their immense burden. The area of the building was packed to such an extent that there was no possibility of escape. At this critical moment Mr. Thomas arrived on the platform, and heard the chairman request the trumpeter to blow a blast on the trumpet. This had such an electric effect upon the dense mass of human beings present that there was dead silence. He then besought them to be calm and to move quietly out of the building. Whilst the immense audience were slowly wending their way out of the building Edith Wynne, accompanied by Mr. Thomas, sang his Welsh patriotic song, "Gwlad y Telgnor a'r Bardd" ("Land of the Minstrel and Bard"), ending with the following lines:—

> In holy lays they'll ever praise
> Walia, their kindred, and their God!
> (Garoli Mawl yn llawn o dân > I'w wlad, ei yenedl a'i Dduw!)

The gallery having been made structurally safe, the performance came off on the following evening, when the building was again densely crowded. The work was received with the greatest enthusiasm, Chorley and Brinley Richards being present. It has since been frequently performed in London.

"LLEWELYN" AT THE WORLD'S FAIR.

Its last performance took place at the Grand Welsh Eisteddfod held at the World's Fair, Chicago, in 1893, at which Mr. Thomas was an adjudicator. Amongst those who sang on that occasion were Mrs. Mary Davies and Mr. Ben Davies. The following is an account of the performance:—

> One of the leading events of the Eisteddfod was the performance of Mr. Thomas' Welsh Cantata, "Llewelyn," which took place on Wednesday evening, September 6. The principal characters were sustained by Mrs. Mary Davies (Eleanor de Montfort), Mrs. Jennie Alltwen Bell (Enid), Mr. Ben Davies (Llewelyn, Prince of Wales), and Mr. D. Gordon Thomas (The Bard). The Cantata was rendered by a chorus consisting of 1,000 voices, Brand's Cincinnati Orchestra, and a band of twenty harps; altogether making an ensemble worthy of the remarkable occasion. An overture, written by Mr. Thomas specially for the event, led up to the opening scene: the convention of bards, minstrels, and soldiers, which was rendered with much spirit and verve. Suffice it to say that the performance of the work was worthy the author who had travelled so many thousand miles to let our cousins over the water know that there still remains amongst us a musical chieftain of the first water. A word as to the opinion entertained by our aforesaid cousins upon the merits of "Llewelyn." The Chicago Tribune says: "It is seldom that a work of such sustained melody, simple, sweet, and pure, is to be met with. It bears the impress of natural spontaneity, and there is at no moment an attempt at over-ambitious striving, and the consequent anti-climatic result. The direct simplicity of the work appeals to the heart rather than the head, and through that quality of all others that never dies—the quality of melody."

At the National Eisteddfod of 1866, held at Chester, Mr. Thomas was the recipient of a purse of 450 guineas, subscribed for and presented to him as a token of appreciation of his unwearying exertions in the cause of Welsh music. Amongst the subscribers to this spontaneous testimonial was the Prince of Wales. At the same Eisteddfod his cantata "The Bride of Neath Valley" was performed. The English libretto was by H. F. Chorley and the Welsh words by Talhairn.

"THE JOHN THOMAS (WELSH) SCHOLARSHIP."

A specially eventful year in the career of Pencerdd Gwalia was that of 1871. On the death of his old master, Balsir Chatterton, he was appointed Harpist to the Queen, which office he still holds. Mr. Thomas refers to the Queen's fondness for Welsh music and of the great interest she takes in the performances of the Private Band at Windsor and Osborne. It was in 1871 that he founded, in London, The Welsh Choral Union, which, under his conductorship, did excellent service in the cause of Welsh music for six years. A permanent outcome of this enterprise was the Welsh Choral Union Scholarship at the Royal Academy of Music. It started in a modest way. Mr. Thomas was much struck with the ability shown by the younger members of his choir. He thereupon personally collected a sum of ninety guineas, sufficient to defray the cost of the fees of a student for three years. The first scholar was Miss Mary Davies, whose distinguished career fully justified the foundation of the Scholarship and the wisdom of the adjudicators. So good a thing deserved to be placed upon something more than a temporary footing. With all the musical enthusiasm characteristic of his race, and that indomitable perseverance so deep rooted in his nature, Mr. Thomas set to work to collect the sum of one thousand guineas. He succeeded. The Scholarship (founded in 1883) became a permanent institution, and is now called, and rightly so, "The John Thomas (Welsh) Scholarship." It is competed for triennially by vocalists and instrumentalists of both sexes, at alternate elections, and entitles the holder thereof to three years' free instruction in the Royal Academy of Music.

APPOINTMENTS AND COMPOSITIONS.

In addition to the appointments already mentioned, Mr. Thomas is Professor of the Harp at the Royal College of Music and at the Guildhall School of Music. He is a Member of the Philharmonic Society and a former Director, and also of the Royal Society of Musicians of Great Britain. He is also a Member of the Academies of the Società di Santa Cecilia, Rome, and of the Philharmonic Society, Florence.

Amongst his compositions, in addition to those above referred to, are numerous duets for two harps or harp and pianoforte; two sets of six studies; many solo pieces; transcriptions of the complete eight books of Mendelssohn's Songs without Words, of Schubert's Songs, of Beethoven's Sonata in C sharp minor (Op. 27, No. 2), Handel's Variations in E ("The Harmonious Blacksmith")—all for the harp—songs with harp accompaniment, part-songs, &c. He also edited and published, in 1878, a concerto for harp and flute, with orchestral accompaniment, composed by Mozart whilst in Paris in 1787. He gave an orchestral concert at St. James's Hall to introduce this work to the musical world, and has since played it at one of the Philharmonic concerts, the Hereford Philharmonic, and on many other occasions.

Mr. Thomas has shown literary gifts in various directions. For instance, the articles on "Welsh Music" and "Welsh Triple Harp" in Sir George Grove's "Dictionary of Music and Musicians"; contributions to the "Myvyrian Archæology of Wales" and the "Cymmrodor." He has read interesting historical papers at the meetings of the Cymmrodorion Society and at the conferences of the Incorporated Society of Musicians. He wrote a very readable and instructive article on the harp in the Victorian Magazine, February, 1892. He speaks five languages—Welsh, English, French, German, and Italian. It is hardly necessary to say that he is known throughout the length and breadth of his native land, where he has adjudicated at many Eisteddfodau; and he is already engaged as adjudicator and solo harpist at the National Eisteddfod to be held in Liverpool next year.

A EULOGY BY BERLIOZ.

It would be presumptuous to pass any eulogy upon Mr. Thomas's attainments as the foremost harpist of his time. But the following unsolicited opinion of one of the great masters of music—Hector Berlioz—may fittingly find a place here. Writing in the Journal des Débats on March 2, 1854, Berlioz said:—

"Quant à M. Thomas, premier harpiste du théâtre de la Reine, à Londres, je l'ai entendu, non pas dans une salle de concert, de loin, entre deux romances, au milieu du bruit des conversations, mais comme il faut entendre les choses et les artistes qu'on aime, je l'ai entendu chez lui; j'étais seul avec lui, et j'ai goûté tout à mon aise les rares et poétiques qualités de son talent. Voilà comment on joue de la harpe. M. Thomas fait réellement ce qu'il veut de son noble instrument, mais il ne vise pas à la difficulté pour elle-même; ses tours de force ont un charme réel. Son jeu est nerveux, passionné, fiévreux pour ainsi dire, mais sans aller jamais jusqu'aux nuances outrées, et sans jamais demander à la harpe de ces effets violens si disgracieux, qu'elle n'accorde qu'en perdant le caractère de suprême élégance qui en fait un instrument si puissant sur certaines organisations. Les morceaux composés par M. Thomas sont en outre d'une remarquable élévation de style. Il m'a charmé, fasciné, magnétisé. Si j'étais riche, comme je me donnerais le luxe d'avoir un tel virtuose pour bercer mes tristes heures et me faire oublier le monde réel!"

[TRANSLATION.]

As to Mr. Thomas, principal harpist of Her Majesty's Theatre, London, I heard him, not in a concert hall, at a distance, between two romances, amid the noise of conversation, but as the things and the artists one loves ought to be heard, I listened to him in his own house; I was alone with him, and I appreciated quite at my ease the rare and poetic qualities of his talent. That is how the harp should be played. Mr. Thomas is thoroughly master of his noble instrument, but he does not aim at difficulty for its own sake; his tours de force have real charm. His style of playing is nervous, impassioned, feverish, as it were, but his expression is never exaggerated, and he never seeks to draw from the harp those violent, uncomely effects, which it only grants by losing that character of supreme elegance which gives it such power over certain organisations. The pieces composed by Mr. Thomas are, besides, of remarkable elevation of style. He charmed, fascinated, magnetised me. If I were rich, how I should enjoy the luxury of having such a virtuoso to soothe my sad hours and make me forget the realities of life!

AN APPRECIATION BY MR. WALTER MACFARREN.

Mr. Walter Macfarren, a fellow-student of Mr. John Thomas at the Royal Academy of Music, has been kind enough to send the following "few words" about his old friend:—

"'I ought to have been called David,' said my old friend John Thomas to me in a recent chat; 'for I was born in Wales and on St. David's Day; but it was ordained otherwise, and I have had, although a Welshman, to put up with the very cosmopolitan christian name John.'

"John Thomas and I were born in the same year, we were fellow-students at the Royal Academy of Music, and we have been more or less intimately associated throughout our lives. If our extended knowledge of each other, similarity of taste (indulgence in the vile weed — which John Thomas eschews — excepted), pursuits, and mutual respect and affection constitute friendship, then I may claim to be one of the oldest among John Thomas's numerous friends, and claim also the right to speak of him as I have known him. Although in early days I did not enjoy very intimate acquaintance with the future Pencerdd Gwalia, yet I have a distinct recollection of his manner of speaking and personal appearance, and I marvel at the slight change which is apparent between the John Thomas of to-day and in the days when we were 'school and form-fellows.' My friend presents the same erect and dignified form and lithe figure, the same unclouded brow, and speaks in the same voice with which he conversed with me upwards of fifty years ago. His character has been equally consistent with his personal appearance. An admirable student, he developed into an equally admirable professor; the most modest of boys, he is now the most modest of men; his yearning for every sort of knowledge has made him an accomplished scholar and linguist; and last, but not least, being born one of nature's gentlemen, he remains one of the most gentle of men.

"I am afraid that I have already occupied too much space, but I must be permitted to add a few words respecting my friend's proficiency on his instrument, and having heard all the great harpists of modern times—to wit, Parish Alvars, Felix Godefroid, T. H. Wright, and the two Chattertons—I have no hesitation in saying that none of them approached John Thomas in the technical skill, beauty of phrasing, and refinement of style which have raised him to the very head of his branch of the musical profession in this country."

THE SHEFFIELD FESTIVAL CHOIR.

A TALK WITH DR. HENRY COWARD.

The London and Provincial musical critics raised a chorus of praise—nay, verily, a pæan—in recording the mighty achievements of the chorus at the recent Sheffield Musical Festival. "I have not returned to hear the second part of 'The Messiah' at a Festival for fifteen years," an eminent veteran of the fraternity was heard to remark. But not only was he present for Part II. in the Albert Hall, but, like his colleagues, he remained until the last note of that glorious Amen chorus resounded in its exultant tones. In order to obtain for the benefit of our readers some of the secrets of the extraordinary success attending the efforts of the choir, Dr. Henry Coward, a master chorus-master, kindly furnished "Our Special Correspondent" at the Festival with an opportunity for a quiet chat upon some matters choralistic.

First, however, honour to whom honour is due. And that is to Dr. Coward himself, not only as the chorus-master of the Festival, but as the life-giver to that splendid choral force. Although he was born in Liverpool, Henry Coward is a Yorkshireman by family and descent, and since he was seven years old he has been an inhabitant of Sheffield. On the 26th of this month he will attain his jubilee. As a boy Dr. Coward was apprenticed to one of those industries for which Sheffield is famous. In due time he won prizes for dexterous handicraft at Sheffield Exhibitions, and thus he was looked upon as one of the most skilful artizans of the town. But greater things were in store for him. When he was fifteen years of age he attended a Tonic Sol-fa singing-class. He not only made remarkable progress in his Doh-me-soh studies, but he soon began to teach the method to others. Success attended him, and not a few of his present-day attainments are due to the fact that he has had to surmount difficulties with no other aid than that of self-help. He showed so much aptitude for teaching that he determined to become a schoolmaster. Upon leaving the workshop he passed through the pupil-teacher stage, and in twelve months found himself headmaster of a British school. Music, however, occupied much of his time. He conducted several choirs, the Sheffield Amateur Orchestral Society, edited a tune-book, became musical critic of the Sheffield Independent, composed a cantata, and, moreover, he studied continuously. Thus he led a busy life, not only in the direction of self-improvement, but in the beneficent work of popularising music in Sheffield, where he is held in the greatest respect by all classes of the community. It is no wonder that music became the all-absorbing passion of his life, and that therefore ten years ago he entered the musical profession.

In 1889 he took the degree of Bachelor in Music at the University of Oxford, and the Doctorate followed in 1894. He is also a Graduate of the Tonic Sol-fa College. It is impossible within the limits of these preliminary remarks to adequately record Dr. Coward's labours on behalf of the cause of music in Sheffield. One event must, however, be mentioned. On the occasion of the visit of the Queen to Sheffield, May 21, 1897, Dr. Coward conducted, from an improvised watch-tower, a choir of 50,000 school children gathered together in Norfolk Park. The manner in which he led this Gargantuan array of singers on that memorable occasion called forth expressions of the highest praise. It is no wonder that so masterly a piece of vocal generalship should have had its fitting complement in his being presented to Her Majesty on that eventful day in the history of Sheffield.

But it is time to refer to the Festival Choir which has so greatly distinguished itself during the past month. It numbers 322 voices, distributed thus :—

Sopranos, 87. Altos, 76.
Tenors, 72. Basses, 87.

Every singer has to pass through the ordeal of a severe test before gaining admittance into the choir. This test is of a threefold nature: (1) the singing of one of the runs in "For unto us," (2) reading from sight, and (3) an exercise in time. The sight-reading and time tests were specially written by Dr. W. G. McNaught. The entrance examination is conducted by a Committee and thus no favour is shown to any candidate; even the members of Dr. Coward's own choir have to pass the examination which is very properly insisted upon. After the Festival the choir is disbanded.

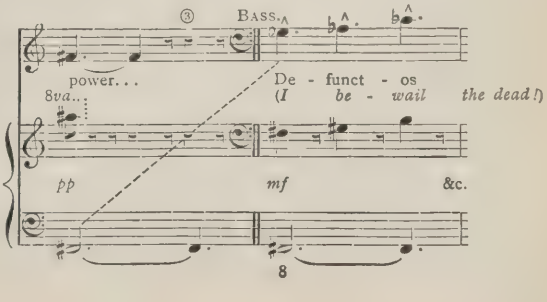
The rehearsals for the Festival commenced in the second week in January. Fifty choral rehearsals were held for the seven works duly performed. "The rule," says Dr. Coward, "was that the singers must attend at least seventy-five per cent. of the rehearsals: if not, out they go. All the choir are Sheffield people, except some fifteen or twenty who live within a radius of twenty miles. One enthusiastic member has travelled no less than 1,500 miles to my rehearsals! Another, who has had to train it twelve miles in and out every time, has not missed a single rehearsal. A batch of six have had to stay the night with friends in the city on every occasion, as there was no means whereby they could return to their homes. We know of no social distinctions. A manufacturer will stand side by side with one of his workmen; a manufacturer's daughter next to one of her father's work-girls; a lady of high degree beside a dressmaker, and yet there has never been the slightest jar—everyone has been animated with a pure love of the art."

The choir is a purely voluntary one. The only payment is that known as "expenses," which in the case of "the 1,500 miles traveller" must have knocked the word "nominal" into a cocked-hat! Each lady-singer received the sum of twenty-five shillings, out of which she had to disburse the cost of all her music, travelling expenses, and the regulation "garment of praise," which at Sheffield was embodied in the technical term—blouse. Our lady readers may be interested in knowing that the blouses worn by the sopranos were of a greenish hue, and that those of the altos reflected the tone-colour of their lovely voices—"the pink of perfection." The men received five shillings less—that is, a sovereign—an amount which had to cover the cost of music, travelling expenses, refreshments, &c. The Festival, it should be noted, is unusually strong on its administrative as well as on its musical side—the business men are musical, and the musical men are businesslike. Happy Sheffield!

"Then as to your methods, Dr. Coward." "Well, I pattern everything. English people are very imitative, and I find that I get the best results by showing them with my own voice how to do it. I pay great attention to the elocutionary side of chorus-singing, to phrasing, tone production, and poetic interpretation. I have every confidence in my singers, and they, on their part, possess the knowledge and have the enthusiasm to respond to my teaching, with what results you have heard to-day. Perhaps you could get some better idea of the plan I pursue if I borrow for you from one of the choir a copy of one of the works we have performed." This Dr. Coward was kind enough to arrange—the work in question being Sullivan's "Golden Legend."

Here are some specimens of the marks—sometimes in blue pencil, sometimes in red, now and then in red and blue—that were made by that good bass singer, Mr. Harry Traviss, at the various rehearsals. The references are to Novello's octavo score :—

P. 3, l. 1. The word "cannot" is underlined.
" 4 (and elsewhere). An English translation is written under the Latin words. The change of rhythm (l. 3) is bluely encircled.
" 7, l. 2. The following to guard against any faltering in taking the G flat (enharmonic change): it is not only spoken about at the rehearsal, but the singer has to mark it in his copy. Similar warnings are to be found in other places.



P. 9, l. 4, bar 2. "One of the keenest dissonances in the work."
,, 21, l. 3, bar 3. "Don't take the sibilant too soon."
,, 34, l. 3. "Crystallize words and rather thin tone. Listen to the accompaniment."
,, 35. The words "woe" and "fear" are underlined.
,, 40, l. 2. ("Alas!") "Not ah-loss."
,, 46, last bar. There is a significant warning—"Words."
,, 47 ("O gladsome light"). There are many dynamic indications and underlinings throughout. For instance, under such phrases as those in the tenor: p. 47, l. 1, bar 3, l. 2, bars 5 and 6; bass: p. 48, l. 3, bar 4, p. 51, l. 1, bar 2 (first bass), which has the direction, "slightly accented." Under the reiterated low F's (second bass) appears the word "soundless."
,, 67, l. 3 (sopranos and altos). "Disappear into eternity."
,, 74, l. 4. "Penetration and softness needed here."
,, 92. ("The night is calm"). "The old madrigal style."
,, 101. The word "pure" doubly underlined throughout.
,, 107. The word "Murderer" very much blue-marked.
,, 108. Against "Un*bar* the door"—"an explosive."
,, 129, l. 2, bars 1 and 2. "Triplet rhythm and dotted quaver after."
,, 130. At the entry of the fugue subject—"One breath." At letter E, "let each part enter prominently and then taper off."
,, 135, bar 1. "Not too" ff—thus indicating a reserve of strength for the final chords, which is indicated by a tremendous < on the unison E at the word "shine"—and the note did shine!

Such are a few examples of the thoughtful care, the commendable thoroughness, and the minute attention to detail which characterise Dr. Coward's choir-training. No wonder that such wonderful results were attained at Sheffield. It must, of course, be admitted that he has splendid material to work upon and mould into shape. His singers have magnificent voices and an innate love of music. But in addition they possess enthusiasm, alertness, intelligence, and unlimited capactiy for taking pains. Moreover, they have a thorough belief in their conductor, they would do almost anything at his command. In proof thereof a gentleman of some local importance and a member of the choir remarked: "I don't know how it is, but at rehearsals the Doctor makes me feel like a child. I am forced to do his bidding. "Aye!" observed a fellow chorister, "if he told us to stand on our heads we should be inclined to do it." No wonder then that their leader's strong magnetic personality, his soul-deep love of music, no less than his boundless energy, and his white-heat enthusiasm permeated every member of that superb choral force which gave distinction to the Sheffield Musical Festival of 1899.

As a special tribute to the excellence of the Sheffield Chorus, we adopt the unusual course of giving the name of every member of the Festival Choir.

CHORUS-MASTER—HENRY COWARD (Mus. Doc., Oxon.).

SIR GEORGE MARTIN ON THE TRAINING OF CHOIRMASTERS.

A PAPER READ AT THE CHURCH CONGRESS.

THERE is an ever increasing demand for good choirmasters. In nineteen out of twenty cases when I am asked to recommend an organist and choirmaster, the qualification for choir-training is placed foremost. Of course a good player is always desired, but the capacity for choir-training is more urgently insisted upon. Let us then examine for a few moments the methods of training young men to meet this important requirement.

Under favourable circumstances the best school is the Cathedral. A boy enters a choir at the age of eight or nine, and for five or six years his voice is being trained, and his musical education is being built upon the soundest foundations. If he should happen to be apt and clever he probably makes himself useful to the organist, and eventually becomes articled to him, very frequently being intrusted with the elementary training of the younger boys in theory, &c. At the age of eighteen or nineteen he is quite qualified to undertake the duties of a choirmaster.

We will now deal with those who are not trained in this manner. Let us take the case of a young man beginning his musical education, and we will give him the advantage of ample means (not too frequently the case), so that he may have the very best training possible. He will enter one of the great musical institutions, and, if he be wise, he will for the first two years take the pianoforte as his principal study, while the organ will be his second study. He then purchases a pedal pianoforte, or procures regular practice on an organ. In this way, if he be very diligent, he practises, say, five hours, the rest of his day being occupied with classes which he is compelled to attend, and his harmony and counterpoint studies fill up any spare time.

All this is very necessary and good, but what is he doing towards becoming an efficient choirmaster? Absolutely nothing, excepting in one instance. There exists at the Royal College of Music a choir-training class, under an experienced and able professor. A choir, more or less professional, is engaged to sing, and standard works are regularly performed, while hints are given as to pace and other matters. But the student finds, when he has secured his first appointment as organist and choirmaster, that the conditions are utterly different. Instead of a professional choir, he probably has the rawest of material to work upon, and before even the simplest chant can be sung he has to set to work to get the voices correctly produced.

But how has he been prepared to face and overcome this difficulty? The natural course, one would think, would be that every organist, knowing the importance of being able to train voices, would show some desire to train his own voice. He would, one would think, as a means of gaining experience, take lessons in singing or voice production as a secondary study. But it is quite the exception to find this course taken, and everything has to be learnt after being appointed to a post as organist. This may account for the condition of the music in some of our churches. It is not overstating the case to say that such singing as is frequently heard in church would not be tolerated anywhere outside a sacred building; and to musical people, the choral service, instead of being a help to devotion, is in some cases an almost unendurable hindrance.

My experience has taught me that the worst singing is frequently found where the clerical authority is possessed of "a little knowledge" of music. The constant interference of faddists has a depressing and irritating effect on the young organist, and tends towards damping the enthusiasm of the choir, while undermining the responsibility of the choirmaster. Wherever good work of any kind is done, it may be taken for granted that the chief authority is a good organiser. A good organiser does not engage his co-workers at considerable expense, and then try to do all the work himself—he lays down certain lines for each to work upon, and if he be wise he allows considerable margin, so that a man may display his individuality and give the best that is in him, without being worried by interference in small matters.

Happily we have another side to the picture. In our Cathedrals, and in many of our principal churches and college chapels, a great deal of time and labour are spent, especially in the training of boys' voices, and Americans and foreigners are the first to acknowledge the excellence of the tone produced in these choirs. The scale of payment of organists, though somewhat improved of late years, is still miserably small, and in many cases it would be impossible for the organist to spend more time than he already does over his choir; yet, if he were really well-equipped as a choir-trainer, even under present conditions the execution of church music would be enormously improved.

I think, then, that we may take for granted, first of all, that good choir-trainers are urgently needed, and that in our public music-teaching institutions little is done to develop this very important side of the profession of music.

How then can matters be improved?

First.—By the study of voice production. On this I lay the greatest possible stress. I repeat that it is rarely done.

Secondly.—Would it not be possible for these music-training schools to affiliate themselves with a certain number of churches, near at hand, so that their students might attend, and, when sufficiently qualified, take the practice of the boys occasionally? I venture to think that this, after a course of lessons in voice production, would amply meet the difficulty.

Although it is generally desirable to combine the offices of organist and choirmaster, yet in cathedrals and churches where much elaborate music is being done, the only way to get the best performance is by having a conductor. This is becoming more and more customary, and in this case the organist would be subordinate to the conductor.* It is extraordinary how well certain choirs, accustomed to sing together, do without a conductor; but the attack can never be as firm and confident, and the finish can never be so refined, as when the voices are under the influence of a sympathetic and able conductor.

As organists have in so many cases to deal with volunteer choirs, it is essential to cultivate a manner when correcting mistakes that will not discourage or irritate the singers. All really successful teachers have the happy faculty of interesting and encouraging their pupils, and so getting the best results.

The subject of church music does not come within the scope of this paper, but while allowing that of late years a large quantity of music has been published which in some cases is unsuitable and even pernicious, yet we must always remember that a severe style of church music would be as much disliked by some as it would be delighted in by others, and that any attempt to tie down music to a certain date or period, or to copies of that period, would be contrary to the broad-minded traditions of the Church in England, as well as to seriously hinder the development of music as an art.

JOHN TROUTBECK.

A familiar figure has been removed from Westminster Abbey and its precincts by the death, which we much regret to record, of the Rev. Dr. John Troutbeck, Precentor of Westminster, who, at the age of sixty-six, passed away on the 11th ult., at his residence, 4, Dean's Yard, Westminster. Neither he nor his friends expected so early a summons. Only a month previously, in reply to an enquiry about the history of the old Abbey pulpit now in Trottiscliffe Church, as recorded on p. 660 of our October number, he wrote the following post card:—

> Hotel Schwarzwald, Titisee, Baden,
> 10 Sept., 1899.
> I hope to be at home in about a fortnight and will then address myself to discovering your pulpit query.
> Yours very truly,
> J. Troutbeck.

He returned, but, alas! only to die. A biographical sketch of the much-lamented Precentor appeared so recently as in our May issue. In connection therewith Dr. Troutbeck was not a little proud of the discovery of the Precentor's seal attached to an ancient document in the Abbey and which was reproduced in fac-simile in these columns; and he was also much pleased at the receipt of letters from former chorister boys who had read the biography of their old Precentor-friend of Manchester. A man of patient continuance in well-doing, the late Precentor will be greatly missed in various circles, though nowhere more so than at Westminster Abbey, with which, had he lived a few weeks longer, he would have been officially connected for thirty years. In regard to his work as a translator of musical librettos—work which he did so well—we learn that this occupation of his leisure hours remained amongst the happiest and most interesting of his life.

We cannot do better, by way of supplementing what we have already written about Dr. Troutbeck, than by quoting the following appreciation of him which concludes a sympathetic notice of his life and work contributed to the Guardian of the 18th ult.:—

"Dr. Troutbeck enjoyed the close friendship and complete confidence of Dean Stanley—who brought him to Westminster in 1869—and of his lifelong friend and former master, Dean Bradley. He had a wonderful aptitude for dealing with men of all classes, winning the respect and confidence of all by his frankness, sound sense, and unselfishness. His aptitude for business, and his skill as an organiser, enabled him to cope with a great press of work, much of which was quite extraneous to his regular duties as Precentor and Minor Canon. In the skilful arrangement of great functions at the Abbey, his organising powers were remarkably displayed. Long before the position of Precentor at the Abbey was open to him, he had distinguished himself, in the conduct of the services, by the extraordinary excellence of his chanting and reading. The notice of his musical publications shows how great an influence he had for many years before his death exercised in connection with the Abbey services. As Precentor and head of the choir, he became primarily responsible for the conduct of all the Abbey services, the choice of the music, and the drawing up of the service-lists, besides a number of other duties being entrusted to him. How worthily he quitted himself in this trust all know, who know anything of the management of the services at Westminster. It would be impossible to enumerate all the varied activities of his busy life, all the cares that devolved upon him. He was consulted upon all kinds of questions, and all who sought his advice and assistance found the resources of his knowledge and experience ungrudgingly placed at their disposal.

* Of course, in the case of unaccompanied music a conductor is absolutely necessary.

"As a churchman, Dr. Troutbeck always held moderate views, shunning everything that savoured of extravagance and unreality.

"Manly, straightforward, truthful, and firm of purpose, walking ever in the faith and fear of God, disinterested and self-sacrificing, Dr. Troutbeck has left behind him a place which will not easily be filled. The Church is poorer for the loss of so faithful a minister, yet the memory and the power of such an example are an imperishable heritage and remain for a blessing from God, Who gives grace unto His servants. 'Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord. Yea, saith the Spirit, for they rest from their labours.'"

THE remains of the late Precentor of Westminster found a fitting resting-place in the East walk of the Abbey Cloisters, where they were interred on the 14th ult. The coffin containing the body was carried by workmen in the employ of the Dean and Chapter. The pall-bearers were: (1) Mr. Randolph Coward, Dr. Troutbeck's private secretary; (2) Mr. Robins, senior chorister of the voluntary evening choir of the Abbey; (3) Sir Frederick Bridge; (4) Sir John Stainer; (5) the Rev. A. F. Rutty, head-master of St. John's Foundation School; (6) Mr. Otto Goldschmidt; (7) Prebendary Tucker, secretary to the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel; (8) the Rev. Edgar Sheppard, Sub-Dean of the Chapels Royal; (9) Mr. J. G. Talbot, M.P.; and (10) the head-master of Westminster School, the Rev. W. G. Rutherford. The procession was met by the Dean and Chapter in the nave of the Abbey, where were ranged in processional order, the Abbey choir together with the Children and Gentlemen of the Chapel Royal. The opening sentences were sung to Croft's music and Psalm xc. to T. Purcell's chant. The lesson was read by the Dean, Dr. Troutbeck's form-master at Rugby. Then followed the anthem, Spohr's "Blest are the departed," to which succeeded Cardinal Newman's fine hymn, "Praise to the Holiest in the height." At the graveside the sentences, "Thou knowest, Lord," and "I heard a voice from heaven," were sung to music by Purcell and Goss. After the final prayers had been said by Archdeacon Furse, Dr. Watts' hymn, "O God, our Help in ages past," concluded a very impressive and beautifully-rendered burial service. The mourners included Mr. J. Troutbeck, Dr. H. Troutbeck, Miss Troutbeck, and Miss E. Troutbeck (children of the late Precentor), Canon Duckworth, Mr. Henry Duckworth, and Sir Dyce Duckworth (brothers-in-law). Bishop Barry was also present at the graveside.

As showing the eclectic taste of the late Precentor Troutbeck, it may not be without interest to print the service-list which he drew up to be sung at Westminster Abbey during the Church Congress week.

WATSON — WHEWELL cover the names of celebrities in the most recent volume (LX.) of the "Dictionary of National Biography." Samuel Webbe, the composer of 300 glees, part-songs, &c., naturally finds a place. He was organist of the Sardinian Chapel, and in the Laity's Directory of 1793 it is stated that he would give instruction gratis every Friday evening "to such young gentlemen as present themselves to learn church music." John Danby and Vincent Novello were pupils of Webbe. His less distinguished son, Samuel Webbe the younger, was at one time organist of the Unitarian chapel in Liverpool and afterwards of some Roman Catholic chapels, thus he was an organist of the Vicar of Bray type. Thomas Weelkes, the composer of the fine madrigal "As Vesta was from Latmos hill descending" (which he contributed to "The Triumphes of Oriana"), is also included. He modestly refers to his first publication as "six dishes full of diuers Madrigalls, the first fruicts of my barren ground, unripe, in regard of time, unsauorie, in respect of others. Therefore, tast, and againe, I pray you, if they lyke your appetite, spare not my Orchard: if they offend your stomack, laye them by to ripen, and you shall proue of my latter Vintage."

ONE of the old anthem composers is noticed in the person of John Weldon. He was a pupil of Henry Purcell and the composer of several beautiful anthems, of which "Hear my crying" is a typical example. Burney depreciated Weldon, saying that "his productions appear flimsy after those of Croft's"; but posterity has by no means endorsed this opinion of the learned historian. Weldon, like Dr. Arne, was buried at St. Paul's, Covent Garden. Amongst the other musicians' names is that of Thomas Welsh, the vocalist, whose singing as a chorister at Wells Cathedral was so attractive that "on Saturdays the city hotels felt the invasion of visitors, and on Sundays the church was crowded to excess." Willoughby Hunter Weiss finds a place by reason of his fame as the composer of "The Village Blacksmith," and Thomas Henry Weist-Hill (should he not have come under the "Hill" section?) is also noticed. The statement that Charles Wesley was organist of Surrey Chapel "before 1794" is, we venture to state, wrong. The first organ in Rowland Hill's octagonal Sanctuary in the Blackfriars Road was erected in 1793, when John Immyns, son of John Immyns, founder of the Madrigal Society, was elected organist. He held the post for a year, until his death in 1794, when he was succeeded by Benjamin Jacob, who was organist until 1825. Two other biographies of distinguished musicians are also included in this volume—Samuel Wesley and his son, Samuel Sebastian Wesley.

The following report of the annual meeting of the Sunday Concert Society appeared in The Times of the 10th ult.:—

A general meeting of the members of this society was held yesterday evening in the small Queen's Hall, Langham Place, Mr. F. Cox presiding. The report of the council gave particulars of the arrangements for the concerts during the forthcoming season on Sunday afternoons, when the famous Queen's Hall Orchestra will perform, and on Sunday evenings, when a more varied programme will be given at cheaper prices than in the afternoons. The report was carried unanimously, and some draft regulations which had been prepared for the reconstitution of the society and the enactment of its rules were carried unanimously. Dr. S. Ringer was elected as an additional vice-president of the society, and Mr. F. Cox was elected hon. treasurer in his stead. Sir W. Lawrence Young and Sir A. C. Mackenzie were added to the council. Dr. Ringer said he was sorry to have to report that, from various causes, which most certainly did not include a lack of energy on the part of the council or manager, the total receipts fell considerably short of the expenses. Mr. Newman, the lessee of the hall, had, however, with great public spirit, and with a desire that the reconstituted society should start free from debts and obligations, paid the deficit out of his own pocket. In these circumstances, there were obviously no surplus funds available for presentation to the Prince of Wales's Hospital Fund, which was the charity which at the outset of the society's formation had been designated as the recipient of any profits from the giving of the concerts.

The St. James's Gazette, in noticing a London concert at which Mr. Edward Lloyd sang the air "Onaway! Awake, beloved!" from "Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast," says:

> "In this melodious air, with its picturesque accompaniment, Mr. Coleridge-Taylor has probably given us the art-song of the future, as it will some day be employed by the English operatic composer who cannot make scientific music interesting, and is ashamed (perhaps unable) to write a tune."

Melody! aye there's the rub. The above deliverance of the critic is in accord with an unreported observation of a successful English composer. In commenting upon the methods of some of his creative brethren, he said: "Directly one of them finds that he has written a melody, he exclaims, 'Good gracious, I've written a tune,' whereupon he forthwith proceeds to consign it to the waste-paper basket." But that indispensable adjunct of the composer's workshop is not the place for real tunes: it can be better utilised as the depository of that verbosity technically called "development," or working-out," but not unknown by the term "padding," and of those uninspirations which come under the designation of "deadly dull."

Two important scholarships will shortly be competed for at the Royal Academy of Music. The first is the Lady Jenkinson's Thalberg Scholarship, founded by subscription raised by Lady Jenkinson, 1877, in memory of the distinguished pianist and composer, Sigismund Thalberg. This scholarship is open to male pianists, who must be British-born subjects, between the ages of fourteen and twenty-one years. Candidates are required to pass an examination in general education previous to the musical competition. The scholarship, which is tenable for two years, amounts to about £20 a year, which is appropriated towards the scholar's fees for instruction at the Academy. The other prize is the Sainton-Dolby Scholarship, founded by subscription, 1886, in memory of the great singer of that name. It is open to contralto vocalists, who must be British-born subjects, between the ages of seventeen and twenty-one years, and who are not and never have been students at the Royal Academy of Music. The scholarship is tenable for three years, and the fund provides 15 guineas a year, which is appropriated towards the scholar's fees for instruction at the Academy. Further particulars as to the conditions of the above scholarships may be obtained upon application to the Secretary, Royal Academy of Music, Tenterden Street, London.

Notices by actual auditors of performances of Handel's works under his own direction are scarce enough. No apology is needed, therefore, for a brief extract from a letter of Lady A. Irwin's in the possession of the Earl of Carlisle, and, apparently, addressed to one of his ancestors. Handel's oratorio "Deborah" was first "exhibited" at the King's Theatre, on March 17, 1733. The prices of admission were raised, the boxes to a guinea, the gallery to half-a-guinea, and this caused great discontent. We learn, moreover, from Rockstro's life of the composer, that the "work was by no means warmly received." In Lady Irwin's letter, dated March 31, 1733, we read that—

> "Handel thought, encouraged by the Princess Royal, it had merit enough to deserve a guinea, and the first time it was performed at that price, exclusive of subscribers' tickets, there was but a 120 people in the House."

Schoelcher states that the subscribers were "greatly shocked, and not without reason, at being forced to pay extra for their places." Lady Irwin, however, remarks that

> "The subscribers being refused unless they would pay a guinea, they, insisting upon the right of their silver tickets, forced into the House, and carried their point."

In the Daily Journal advertisement of the second performance, the prices are reduced, and there is a N.B. to the effect that: "Subscribers' silver tickets will be admitted." Of the performance itself, Lady Irwin writes:—

> "I was at this entertainment (sic) on Tuesday; 'tis excessive noisy, a vast number of instruments and voices, who all perform at a time, and is in music what I fancy a French ordinary in conversation. . . .

A somewhat extra-"ordinary" comparison, Lady Irwin!

The Meyerbeer Fund has this year at its disposal three prizes, which are to be competed for as follows: (1) a choral double fugue, (2) an overture for full orchestra, and (3) a dramatic scena—"Coriolanus at the gates of Rome"—to verses by Theodor Rehbaum. The total money value of the prizes is 4,500 marks, concerning which all particulars may be obtained upon application to the German Ministry of Fine Arts, Berlin.

Amongst the forthcoming musical books of the season will be an English version of Heribert Rau's romance on the life of Mozart, which Messrs. Jarrold will issue under the title of "The Tone King"; and a translation (published by Messrs. Seeley) of Professor Dietrich's recollections of his comrade and friend, Johannes Brahms.

The article on the Barrel-organ in Trottiscliffe Church, which appeared in our last issue, has attracted much attention. Mr. J. Herbert England, organist and choirmaster of All Souls' Church, Halifax, has sent us the following notes upon the subject of church barrel-organs:—

The first organ (in modern times) in the Old Priory Church, Bridlington (1100-1135), was a barrel-organ, the gift of Capt. R. Lowry, built, in 1834, by Postill, of York, at a cost of 200 guineas. It stood in a gallery erected for the purpose (replacing an old structure), and had a very large, elegant, gothic case, with gilt front pipes, six times as large as the instrument itself. It was blown by hand and possessed three sets of barrels, eight stops—large and small open diapason, stopped diapason (divided treble and bass), principal, twelfth, fifteenth, and sesquialtera. It was also furnished with a keyboard, G G to F, in case a player might turn up, for there was no resident musician in the town. In 1838 Mr. Postill was directed to remove the barrels, and the organ was enlarged, and made available for playing at the keyboard only. The organ was taken down in 1889; sold in 1893 to a private gentleman at Hull.

There are, or were, church barrel-organs in Eynsham Church; Bladon, near Woodstock; Coxwell, Berkshire; Wiston, Suffolk; Warden, Bedfordshire; and Bainton, near Bridlington.

There is a barrel-organ combined with a larger instrument in the chapel of Warneford Lunatic Asylum, near Oxford. When there is no available talent for the keyboard instrument, one of the inmates turns the handle of the barrel-organ!

A curious musical epitaph has been discovered by Mr. Charles Drury in Youlgreave Churchyard, Derbyshire. It is on an upright stone to the memory of one Samuel Taylor, who died January 14, 1848, aged seventy-two. Here is the monumental stanza:—

> To the down Bow of Death
>   His Forte gave way,
> All the Graces in sorrow were drown'd.
>   Hallelujah Crescendo
> Shall be his glad lay
> When Da Capo the Trumpet shall sound.

What's in a name? Last month was celebrated the fiftieth anniversary of the demise of Frederick Chopin, who died in Paris on October 17, 1849. In the same year, on March 18, there died in London (at Grove Place, Brompton) the Rev. Frederick Choppin. "He was of St. John's College, Oxford, M.A., 1810," according to the notice of his demise in the Gentleman's Magazine of fifty years ago.

The Bridlington Festival will probably be held on April 26, 1900. The following works have been selected for rehearsal: Verdi's "Requiem," Stanford's "Revenge," and Coleridge-Taylor's "The Death of Minnehaha." Mr. Bosville, of course, conducts.

Herr Richard Strauss has utilised his leisure during the summer recess by composing a number of Lieder, and also two male choruses, to verses from Herder's "Stimmen der Völker," his first contribution to male choir literature.

Mr. Macdonald Smith has collected and issued in pamphlet form the articles on pianoforte-playing which he has contributed to various musical journals in England and America. The publication, which treats of the author's system of "touch and technique" ("from brain to keyboard"), is worthy of thoughtful perusal.

Mr. F. H. Cowen has been appointed—or, to be strictly accurate, re-appointed—to the conductorship of the Philharmonic Society. Congratulations thereupon to the veteran Society and to the composer of the "Scandinavian" Symphony. Since Mr. Cowen laid down the Philharmonic baton seven years ago he has greatly strengthened his position as a conductor of orchestral music. Therefore, it may be assumed that at Queen's Hall he will repeat his Manchester triumphs and worthily maintain the best traditions of the Philharmonic conductorship.

Signor L. A. Villanis, the distinguished musical critic of the Gazetta di Torino, has just completed a work entitled "Il Clavicembalo e la sua letteratura," upon which he has been engaged for a number of years, and which will form an important contribution to the history of the development of the pianoforte and the music written for the instrument, or its earlier representatives, up to the period of Beethoven.

The Rev. H. G. Daniell-Bainbridge, M.A., Minor Canon and Sacrist of Westminster Abbey, and Priest in Ordinary to the Queen, has been appointed by the Dean to succeed the late Rev. Dr. Troutbeck as Precentor of Westminster Abbey.

Mr. Walter Alcock will resume his Saturday afternoon organ recitals at Holy Trinity Church, Sloane Street, on the 4th inst. These interesting performances begin at 4 p.m.

THE SHEFFIELD MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

An unrivalled Festival Choir and a genius Chorus-master—Henry Coward by name. O where shall these be found? At Sheffield, in a county where choral singing is wont to be made. Yes, the "representative theme" of the Sheffield Musical Festival was—the chorus.

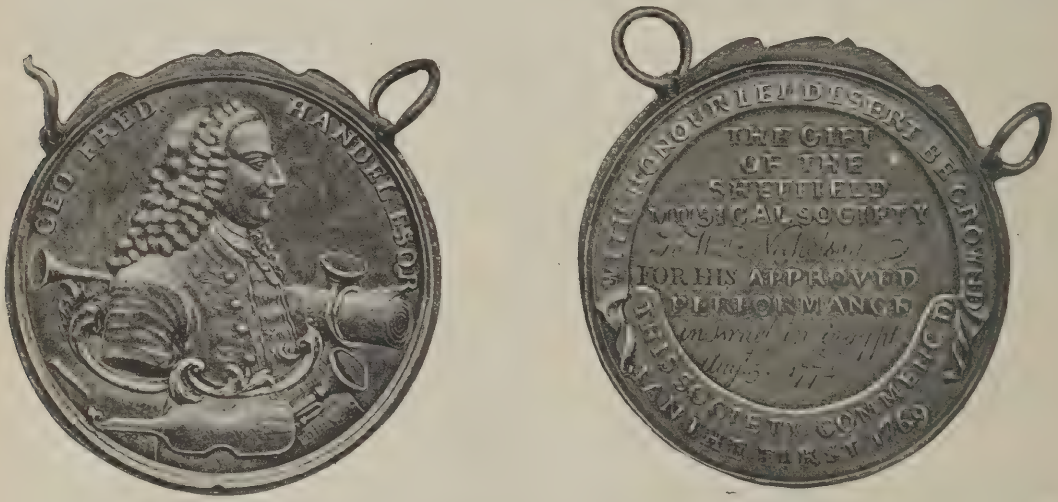
This music-making is not a matter of ancient history. It germinated in a successful performance of Mendelssohn's "Elijah," conducted by Dr. Henry Coward, on October 10, 1895. In the following year—October 13 and 14, 1896—a Festival, lasting two days, was equally successful, both from an artistic and financial point of view. A surplus profit of £780 (of which £120 were given to local medical charities) paved the golden way for a Festival on a larger scale, which was held in the Albert Hall on the 11th, 12th, and 13th ult. And here it may be remarked that this Festival is promoted independently of charity, though in justice to the good people of Sheffield it should be stated that charity in one of its best forms—the healing of the sick—is benefited thereby.

The city of Sheffield is fortunate in having a number of public-spirited men who, with the Duke of Norfolk at their head as an active President, united themselves together and worked shoulder to shoulder in order to make the Festival a thorough success from all points of vantage. The excellence of the business arrangements merits unstinted praise, and in this connection the name of Mr. Willoughby Firth, the chief honorary secretary, naturally calls for special mention, not only for his unwearied exertions in the management of this Festival and that previously held, but also for his unfailing courtesy and generous hospitality throughout.

As in 1896, Mr. August Manns was the conductor in chief of the Festival, and he again brought with him his band from the Crystal Palace. The soloists were of the first rank, and the chorus—to whom and their wonderful chief I have specially referred in another column—was an entirely voluntary one. Here, then, were all the elements which, skilfully welded together, make for high achievement, especially in music-loving Yorkshire.

The Festival opened on the morning of Wednesday, the 11th ult., with "The Messiah." It is absolutely impossible to describe the magnificence of the Sheffield choir. Their singing of those familiar choruses was literally overwhelming; and it is no exaggeration to say that the music was thereby invested with a freshness, a vitality, a soul-moving earnestness far beyond anything hitherto attained by any choral force in this country. Attack, vigour, phrasing, articulation, perfect ensemble, and unsurpassable tone, all combined to stamp the performance of Handel's masterpiece as masterly. But this was not all. Every one of the artists forming that superb choir was imbued with the rare gift of what may be designated heart-art in music, which is indispensable to the ideal interpretation of so sublime a work as "The Messiah." This was illustrated in the rendering of such a chorus as "He trusted in God," in which the derisive scorn of the words received their fullest significance. How seldom does a choir get behind the mere crotchets and quavers, the sharps and flats of the music and thus rise to the heights of its poetic interpretation.

It would be quite easy to exhaust all available adjectives in describing—or rather in attempting to describe—the extraordinary results achieved by the choir at this memorable performance and indeed throughout the Festival. Even so small a blemish as the over-accentuation of the dotted semiquavers in "His yoke is easy," due in all probability to over-anxiety, was as a spot on the sun of this splendid achievement. The runs in "For unto us" were not only sung with faultless accuracy in regard to tune, evenness, time, and rhythmic observance, but one's breath was almost taken away by the overwhelming effect of a marvellous crescendo towards the end of each run, which culminated in a terrific forte, the final note of the phrase being released, as a distinguished critic has it, "with a smartness suggesting almost the crack of a whip." The "Hallelujah" chorus acquired an added dignity to its grandeur at the hands—or rather the voices—of those Sheffield choristers. And what shall be said of that oft ill-treated "outgoing voluntary"—the "Amen chorus"? On this occasion no one in that vast audience moved. All—even the blasé London critics—were held spellbound by the torrents of sound that poured forth from those full-voiced Yorkshire throats. Climax seemed to be piled upon climax, and yet there was never an anti-climax, but an ideal culmination that was positively overwhelming.



QUAINT SILVER MEDAL, STRUCK TEN YEARS AFTER THE DEATH OF HANDEL, IN THE POSSESSION OF MR. W. T. FREEMANTLE, OF ROTHERHAM.

(Reproduced from the Sheffield Musical Festival programme-book, by kind permission of Mr. J. W. Northend, Sheffield.)

The soloists were Madame Ella Russell, Miss Clara Butt, Mr. Ben Davies (who specially distinguished himself in the "Passion" music), and Mr. Andrew Black, who was as conscientious an oratorio singer as ever. The additional accompaniments of Mozart and others were used. Is it not time that some of these "hangers on" of Handel's score were sent about their business? And why were the choruses "Since by man" and "For as in Adam" sung as quartets?

The first part of the concert on Wednesday was devoted to Mr. Edward Elgar's "King Olaf," a work which rapidly established his fame as a representative British composer. "King Olaf" was composed for the North Staffordshire Musical Festival, held at Hanley, in 1896. Its choral merits more especially were impressively demonstrated on the present occasion. I think I may venture to say that the rendering of the choruses more than satisfied the composer, who conducted what was, on the whole, a very fine performance. Mr. Elgar's stirring strains provided a fine outlet for the dramatic instincts of the choir. The singers liked the work, and the composer was not at enmity with the singers, judging from what he said to them after the performance, and from their reception of the composer-conductor. The principals were Miss Alice Esty, Mr. Edward Lloyd, and Mr. Charles Knowles, the last-named a Yorkshire vocalist, who rendered good service during the Festival. The second part of the concert included Mozart's Symphony in E flat, in the performance of which the orchestra showed that they were capable of high attainment, Rubinstein's "Air de Poppée" ("Néron"), sung by Miss Lilian Coomber; the "Prize Song" from the "Meistersinger," sung by Mr. Edward Lloyd, and Elgar's imposing "Imperial" March, conducted by the composer.

Thursday's proceedings opened with "Samson and Delilah," by Saint-Saëns, a clever but unsatisfying work, which contains some doubtful elements of popularity. What little the chorus had to do they did well, the rendering of the charming female chorus, "Fair spring smiles again," being specially worthy of mention by reason of its pure vocalisation and faultless tone-production. Miss Marie Brema and Mr. Edward Lloyd were irreproachable in the title-rôles, and Mr. David Bispham and Mr. Charles Knowles were efficient in the parts of The High Priest and Abimelech. A special word of acknowledgment is due to Mr. Joseph Lycett for the excellent manner in which he filled one of the minor parts. The concert concluded with Liszt's "Die Loreley," sung by Miss Alice Esty, and Schumann's ever welcome Pianoforte Concerto, the solo portion of which was finely played by the distinguished Yorkshire pianist, Mr. Frederick Dawson.

Sullivan's "Golden Legend" and Beethoven's Choral Symphony provided a feast of fat things for the evening music-making. No wonder that every seat in the Albert Hall was occupied by an eagerly expectant audience. The same story has to be told of the chorus—no deterioration, but improvement, if indeed that were possible. The opposites in ideal choral singing were exemplified in the exquisite calm of "O gladsome Light" (encored) and the majestic sonority of the Epilogue. The rendering of the latter was a veritable triumph, and the crescendo on the unison high E towards the end, no less than the gorgeous, but unforced fortissimo of the concluding bars, was electrifying. The gem of the performance, if not of the Festival, was the tender grace of "O pure in heart." Oh! the moving power of simplicity in music. Madame Ella Russell, Miss Jessie King, Mr. Ben Davies, and Mr. David Bispham did excellent work in the solo portions. Beethoven's Choral Symphony followed. The italics in the title are fully justified by the part the Sheffield choristers played (or rather sang) in Beethoven's exacting work. How they revelled in what to most choirs almost borders upon impossibilities. And with what ease they surmounted all the difficulties in spite of the high pitch. The "representative theme" of the Festival admits of no variation in regard to eulogy.

English music was commendably to the fore at Sheffield. On Friday morning Sir Hubert Parry's "King Saul" was finely performed. The chorus went on from strength to strength, being not a little on their mettle (or, pace Sheffield, should it not be metal?) under the enthusiastic sway of the composer's baton. "It is the best performance of the work I have ever had," remarked Sir Hubert to me; "those Sheffield singers are really wonderful." The principals were Miss Marie Brema, Madame Ella Russell, Miss Clara Butt (who specially distinguished herself in the part of The Witch), Mr. Edward Lloyd, Mr. Andrew Black, and Mr. Charles Knowles.

The Festival was brought to a worthy conclusion by a concert on Friday evening, which included "The Naiades" Overture, by Sterndale Bennett, a graceful tribute to a native of Sheffield; Saint-Saëns's "La Fiancée du Timbalier" (Miss Marie Brema), Stanford's "Three Cavalier Songs" (Mr. David Bispham), the Final Scene from "Die Walküre" (Miss Marie Brema and Mr. Bispham), and, by way of an appropriate doxology, Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise."

The chorus and their chorus-master, Dr. Henry Coward, were the bright shining lights of the Sheffield Festival; but, as already stated, I have specially referred to their work and methods in a leading article in another column. It only remains to gather up a few threads wherewith to complete the texture of this report. Mr. August Manns conducted with the skill resulting from technical equipment combined with long experience. The orchestra, however, did not attain to the high-water mark of Festival efficiency. Full acknowledgment should be made of the admirable services of Mr. J. W. Phillips as organist at the performances, and not a little of the success of the choral singing was due to his admirable accompaniments at the rehearsals. The analytical programmes were the joint-authorship of Mr. F. Schöllhammer and Dr. Henry Coward. It was an excellent idea to print, in parallel columns, the analysis side by side with the words.

In conclusion, it is quite certain that, festivally speaking, Sheffield has come to stay. Vulcan must again give place to Orpheus three years hence. In view of that more than probable event we venture to offer one or two suggestions. (1) that the Committee should commission one or more works from those composers whose strength lies in choral music; (2) that a place should be found for one or more unaccompanied vocal pieces, one of which might be a specimen of the English madrigal school; and (3) that the low pitch should be used in 1902. To that Festival we look forward with hope and expectation.

CHURCH MUSIC AT THE CHURCH CONGRESS.

For the first time in its existence of thirty-eight years, the Church Congress met in London during the second week of last month. It cannot be said that so important a feature in the services of the Church as the music of the sanctuary has received undue attention at these ecclesiastical gatherings. As a matter of fact, the subject has been entirely ignored at very nearly half of those already held—that is to say, papers on Church music have been read at only nineteen out of the thirty-seven previous Congresses. No suspicion of such neglect can be attributed to the powers that be upon whom devolved the management of the Church Congress of 1899.

WESTMINSTER ABBEY.

The subject was ushered in with singular appropriateness by a deeply impressive service in Westminster Abbey on the evening of Wednesday, the 11th ult. The occasion had its interesting and pathetic side—interesting by reason of the illustrations given of the Church music of the sixteenth, seventeenth, eighteenth, and nineteenth centuries, and pathetic in the sad circumstance that Precentor Troutbeck, who died on that very day, had made all the arrangements for the service previous to his departure for a well-earned holiday. After shortened Evensong the Bishop of Richmond gave an eloquent address, taking as his text the familiar words, "After the fire, a still small voice." The duties of the composer of Church music and those of the organist and choirmaster, both of whom had great and equal responsibilities, were earnestly dwelt upon. In regard to the careful instruction and training of the choir, the Bishop said:—

"The organist must not only interpret the music, he must interpret also the principles of worship and the structure of the service. He may well go farther and explain the intention and the spirit of each psalm and hymn. 'I will pray with the understanding; I will sing with the understanding also.' There is a conspicuous lack of intelligent worship in many congregations. The choir must take the lead; the choir-trainer must show the way.

"I once read, I do not remember where, of an organ in a little German village on which were carved the following words. Above the keyboard:—

> Thou playest not for thyself, but for God's people,
> So let thy playing—simple, earnest, pure—
> Lift up their hearts to God.

> In perfect sympathy with words of praise.
> Catch thou the true deep spirit of thy hymns.

> Oft hearken to the voices of the choir,
> So they and thou wilt likelier lift to God
> One harmony, one praise.

Surely these simple words gather up the true qualifications of organist and choir-trainer — alertness, sympathy, and, above all, faith. His service is an offering to God, his worship an approach to God."

The following anthems were then sung:

Sixteenth Century.	"If ye love Me"	Tallys.
	"Bow Thine ear, O Lord" ..	Byrd.
Seventeenth Century.	"Hosanna"	Gibbons.
	"Praise the Lord, O my soul" ..	Purcell.
Eighteenth Century.	"Praise the Lord, O my soul" ..	Croft.
	"God is our hope and strength"	Greene.
Nineteenth Century.	"If we believe"	Goss.
	"The Wilderness"	S. S. Wesley.

This excellent selection was worthy of the best traditions of our English Church music. That these splendid anthems should be sung in "the dear old Abbey" was in the highest degree appropriate to the occasion. The first three were rendered without accompaniment, under the able direction of Sir Frederick Bridge, the Abbey organist, who accompanied the remainder upon the organ. The service closed with the singing of the hymn "O God, our help in ages past."

"WELSH HYMNOLOGY."

On the same evening, in the Great Hall of the Church House, the Dean of St. David's read a valuable paper on "Welsh Hymnology." Although this discourse dealt principally with the words of Welsh hymns, the following extract in regard to the singing of them deserves to be quoted. The Dean said that "The hymns of Wales form the very backbone of the religious life of the Principality, beyond, as I believe, anything else.

"But why," continued the Dean, "it may be asked, should it be so in Wales more than in England? For one thing, there is the fact already mentioned that hymns formed a prominent feature in the religious movement of the last century. There is of course the innate love of the Welsh people for poetry and music. A good deal is also to be said for the custom, which prevailed up to about thirty years ago, of learning by heart most of the hymns used in public worship. The congregation were expected to know by heart the hymns generally used, and for the benefit of those who did not, or could not, the words were given out in two lines at a time, and repeated two or three times over. To take a hymn-book to church was a thing almost unknown in my younger days, and those who did so were regarded as guilty of cultivating English pride ('balchder Seisnig'), and of making light of the traditions of the elders.

"And here let me refer to a custom which the old habit of storing the memory with hymns made it easy to observe, a custom which prevailed, and still prevails, in some parts of South Wales. I refer to the custom of singing hymns during the celebration of Holy Communion. After the first railful, those who had communicated retired to the body of the church, and there sang sacramental hymns while the service proceeded, until at the close the entire body of communicants joined in one Eucharistic song of adoration and praise. Nothing more impressive have I ever witnessed. Nor was this custom confined to Wales, for Denison in his book called 'Heavenly Banquet,' published in 1619, tells us that singing at the Communion was common in his time. 'It was a general fashion used in our church in employing the congregation during the time of communicating.' In 'Strange's Alliance' the practice is frequently mentioned—'While some were receiving, others were left to employ themselves in the singing of a Psalm.' Another writer (Lilly) mentions the practice as in vogue in 1624, and says: 'During the distribution of the elements he well remembered they sang thirteen parts of the 119th Psalm.' And that this custom prevailed pretty generally in Wales in the last century may, I think, be inferred from the fact that no less than six editions of Thomas Baddy's 'Sacramental Hymns' were published between 1703 and 1740."

THE ALBERT HALL MEETING.

The most important meeting of the Congress, from the standpoint of Church music, was that held in the Royal Albert Hall on the evening of Saturday, the 14th ult., when a large audience, mainly composed of organists, choirmasters, and members of church choirs, was assembled in the vast edifice at Kensington. The orchestra was occupied by the members of the London Church Choir Association and the London Gregorian Association, who, under the direction of Mr. Charles Macpherson, sub-organist of St. Paul's Cathedral, greatly contributed to the enjoyment of the occasion. The accompanying organists were Dr. Warwick Jordan, honorary organist of the London Gregorian Association, and Mr. F. B. Kiddle, organist of St. Marylebone Parish Church. Previous to the commencement of the meeting, organ recitals were given by Mr. W. S. Hoyte and Mr. F. A. W. Docker, and thus the time of waiting was pleasantly beguiled away.

THE BISHOP OF LONDON ON CHURCH MUSIC.

The Bishop of London, as President of the Church Congress, occupied the chair, and in his introductory remarks he not only admitted that he knew nothing of the technicalities of music, and he owned to the possession of a very imperfect ear. "His interest," he said, "was concerned with the intellectual, educational, and devotional side of music. He would venture to say that too much care and too much thought could not be bestowed on the selection of music that was rendered in the Church service. He noticed two things from the evening's programme—that the oldest and the most modern music were quite sure to take care of themselves, the oldest, because there were sentimental and other considerations which would always secure it a high place, and the most modern, because it expressed forms and fashions of thought and feeling which were perfectly sure also to secure its due consideration. But it was the music that lay between these two which sometimes ran a chance of being forgotten. He was very anxious that the old traditions of Anglican Church music should always be continuously preserved. The services of the Church required consideration from a number of sides, and they had a distinct educational value. The services at any particular church ought to be such as to educate those who attend them, and he did not think that any church services were properly conducted if they simply thought of the old and the modern music and left out all that lay between. He hoped they would not think him exceedingly insular if he said he rather regretted to see the tendency on great occasions to select almost habitually foreign music. He could say that where other people could not, because when he went to a church he generally found it was on some occasion on which a great effort, musically and otherwise, was made. He noticed on these occasions that he got a very large amount of modern German music. He had nothing to say against modern German music, but he was only pleading sometimes for a little Anglican music. He would like to point out what he meant exactly. In connection with this Church Congress there had been two services held at St. Paul's Cathedral. The anthem on one occasion was by Brahms, and on the other by Spohr—both most beautiful anthems and most appropriate, but considering that they were English people met together, he thought they might sometimes have a little English music. He only wished to add the assurance of his most sincere sympathy with Church music, of his high appreciation of its great importance, and his great hopes that the words spoken that night and the enthusiasm of that great audience might carry home some lessons which might be profitable to all in the future."

The next speaker was Sir Hubert Parry, who contributed a paper entitled "The Essentials of Church Music," which we had intended to print in its entirety. For various reasons it was impossible for the manuscript to reach us in time for publication, and, therefore, we are compelled to withhold reference to Sir Hubert's paper till our next number.

PROFESSOR STANFORD ON ORGANIST v. PRECENTOR.

After the singing of the old 100th Psalm, a deviation from the printed programme was the appearance of Professor Stanford, who discoursed on "The choice of music in church choirs." Judging from the applause that was unstintingly meted out to him, the Professor scored his best points—if not his counterpoints—by his references to the thorny question of Organist v. Precentor. He said, in regard to the mischoice of music in cathedrals, that the "real root of the mischief was, he was convinced, the trammelled position of the man who was responsible for the performance of the music, and who was, perhaps, in many cathedral bodies, the only representative of thoroughly trained knowledge of the subject—the organist. In most cases the responsibility for the choice of music was not centred in him, the expert, but was either altogether in the hands of one of the clergy or divided between a precentor and the organist. Division of responsibility, or the assignment of it to the non-expert, was alike, to his mind, a fatal mistake. If such conditions as these were to prevail much longer in their cathedral and church choirs, they might say good-bye to the great store of noble music which their musical forefathers had bequeathed to them. They would find in its place flimsy and ephemeral trash, which had just enough sensationalism in it to tickle the musical palate; they would find music, much of it excellent in its proper place, but written for totally different conditions, in other countries, imported into their services, destroying their character and altering the whole taste of the community—a taste which it had taken seven centuries to build up in this country. The advice he would venture to give was in the words of Wagner, who said in the 'Meistersinger,' 'Ehrt eure deutschen Meister,' so let him adapt it, 'Honour your English masters.' The mainstay of their music should be the great works of the past, without ceasing to encourage and include all that was best and most genuine in contemporary music. The control of the choice of music should be left to the man whose life-work it was to study and understand it, the man whom they put in command of their organ and their choir. Stop this hopeless method of either dividing responsibility, or placing it in the hands of the inexperienced amateur."

Curiously enough, a Precentor, in the person of the Rev. Canon Scott Holland, who humorously disclaimed coming before the audience as "an expert," read the paper assigned to Sir George Martin, owing to the unavoidable absence of the organist of St. Paul's. This contribution to the subject, "The Training of Choirmasters," we give in another column.

Dr. A. Madeley Richardson, organist of St. Saviour's Cathedral, Southwark, then read a technical but interestingly compiled paper on "Voice production in choir training." Dr. Richardson's methods were admirably illustrated by the excellent singing of his choir in "Lead, kindly Light" (to Dykes's tune), the 42nd Psalm (chanted), and Gounod's anthem "Send out Thy Light." The beauty of tone, careful attention to phrasing, and distinct articulation of the words received full acknowledgment of approval in the loud applause of the audience, which was largely composed of experts.

The concluding paper was by Canon Rhodes Bristow on "Ancient Plain Song," which was ably illustrated by the members of the London Gregorian Choral Association.

In addition to several hymns sung during the course of the evening two anthems were efficiently contributed by the choirs. Stainer's "Lord, Thou art God" (tenor solo, Mr. William Davies, of St. Paul's Cathedral) and Martin's "Hail, gladdening Light," in which the quartet was sung by Harold Curd and Ernest Grout, sopranos; Mr. George May, alto; Mr. W. Davies, tenor; and Mr. R. E. Miles, bass, of St. Paul's Cathedral choir.

An interesting feature of the Congress was a series of concerts by some of the leading choirs of London, of which the following is a list:—

St. Barnabas, Pimlico (Mr. Richard Lemaire, organist and choirmaster).

St. Peter's, Eaton Square (Dr. G. F. Huntley, organist and choirmaster).

St. Peter's, Cranley Gardens (Mr. Herbert Hodge, organist and choirmaster).

St. Anne's, Soho (Mr. E. H. Thorne, organist and choirmaster).

St. Andrew's, Wells Street (Mr. F. A. W. Docker, organist and choirmaster).

The Lothbury Male-Voice Choir (Mr. T. B. Evison, conductor).

Excellent organ recitals were also given throughout the week by—

Mr. Walter Alcock, Mr. H. L. Balfour, Dr. Bly, Dr. Walford Davies, Mr. F. A. W. Docker, Mr. W. S. Hoyte, Mr. H. W. Hunt, Dr. G. F. Huntley, Mr. F. B. Kiddle, Mr. E. H. Lemare, Mr. F. T. Lowden, Mr. S. A. Mosdell, Dr. W. J. Reynolds, Dr. A. M. Richardson, and Mr. H. Davan Wetton.

Royal Academy of Music.—The Henry Smart Scholarship has been awarded to Nellie Maude Weaser (a native of Southend). The examiners were Messrs. W. Stevenson Hoyte, Edwin H. Lemare, and Dr. Charles Steggall. The Wessely Exhibitions have been awarded to Marie Pauline Hall (of Bristol) and Hilda Florence Martin Barnes (of Barnes). The examiners were Messrs. Josef Bláha and Hans Wessely.

MR. S. COLERIDGE-TAYLOR'S "THE DEATH OF MINNEHAHA."

By the time these lines appear, Mr. Taylor's new cantata will have been produced at the North Staffordshire Musical Festival at Hanley.

Admirers of the now famous "Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast" will turn to the new work with high expectations, not altogether free perhaps from some misgivings lest the young composer should have failed to equal his first attempt at a cantata. They may be assured at once that the Hanley work is not only worthy of its companion, but marks a great and decided step forward towards that goal which all serious artists set themselves and so few, alas! are destined ever to reach.

The book of "The Death of Minnehaha" deals with the canto superscribed "The Famine" in Longfellow's poem, and is too well known to require any further description.

When compared with the "Wedding-Feast," the new cantata must strike the critic as the superior effort, by reason of finer workmanship and greater depth of feeling, combined with the same absolute originality and spontaneity. True, comparisons are in this case of little avail, in fact somewhat "odious," for the "Feast" is a delicious idyll and its sequel a heart-moving tragedy. For both Mr. Taylor has found music which exhausts the subject and makes it impossible for any future composer to set the same poems again. That certain similarities are noticeable in the rhythmic construction of the subject-matter as well as in the arrangement of the works into sections is but natural, seeing that the metre and style are identical in the two divisions of the poem.

A careful study of the cantata will show Mr. Taylor's great advance in the art of development. His short germ themes are evolved into new and often striking melodies; they throw out beautiful shoots and tendrils where one least expects them, and where they are consequently doubly welcome. Those who set great store by the technical equipment of a composer—and who does not?—will turn with delight to the last chorus, which is the longest choral movement that Mr. Taylor has yet written. There our composer faced a difficult task in having to suggest the solemnity of the burial of Minnehaha and the despairing sorrow of her husband, Hiawatha. He has risen to the occasion in a lengthy movement which, as a piece of workmanship pure and simple, will be a delight to the connoisseur, unpretentious though it be, and which at the same time reaches a rare degree of sheer musical beauty, unaffected expressiveness, and heart-rending pathos.

In such an important detail as declamation Mr. Taylor has always been more than satisfactory. In the present work he is superlatively good. Not one false accent will be found in the work. His music is melodic speech in the highest sense of the term, and how much more deeply such speech, uttered by an inspired musician, stirs us than the spoken word!

The composer fixes the situation, so to speak, at the outset by starting with a theme (No. 1) to which the opening lines of the poem, "Oh, the long and dreary winter," are afterwards sung. This Famine theme—as we may call it, appears here, at the beginning, in E minor, larghetto lamentoso, on the dominant pedal. It is almost immediately followed by a little wail of three notes—several times repeated on different degrees of the scale. Returning to No. 1, with a different accompaniment and continuing with a new phrase afterwards connected with the words printed below—much used as a figure of accompaniment later on, and a most expressive trombone phrase (4 b) which stands for a cry of agony and despair, and will be much in evidence as the catastrophe approaches.

Soon (the Introduction occupies fifty bars) the chorus enter with No. 1, immediately followed by No. 3, and, after a short orchestral interlude (1 and 4 a), by a new phrase, given to the tenors and basses against an independent accompaniment—

No. 5.

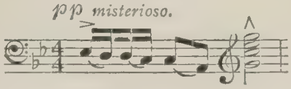
The next few pages deal chiefly with material already presented (1, 2, 4 a), the accompaniment meanwhile growing fuller and more important, until we reach a very impressive climax, produced by fresh and valuable material which we have no space to quote. Another orchestral interlude on No. 1, and we reach the end of the first section, pp.

With the entry of Famine and Fever the music naturally changes in character. The "two silent and gloomy guests" are ushered in by a short figure for bassoons and lower strings, followed by a chord for wood-wind, horns, big drum, and cymbals struck with drumstick—

No. 6.



This for a time predominates in the orchestra, the chorus meanwhile busying themselves with new phrases which we need not quote. Nor is it necessary to give any musical extracts from the two short and strongly declaimed exclamations of Famine (baritone) and Fever (soprano), as the music, fine as it is, has only passing interest and is not referred to again. Note should be taken, however, of the excited orchestral passage after Fever has spoken. Against an alternately rising and falling chromatic triplet passage for wood-wind and upper strings, the rhythm of the Famine theme asserts itself with blare of brass (sff) con furia. A return to Nos. 1 and 2 leads to this lovely melody in the chorus—with a new and richly harmonised accompaniment including harp. This is immediately followed by an important and touching idea of which, in conjunction with No. 7, we shall hear more anon—

No. 7.

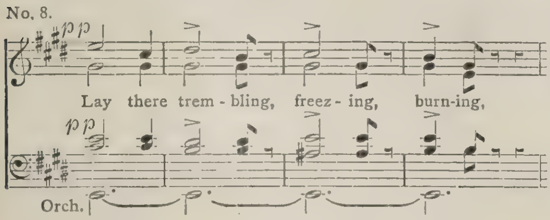
No. 8.



It is unaccompanied save for the tonic pedal. The orchestra develops this expressive phrase beautifully, thus—

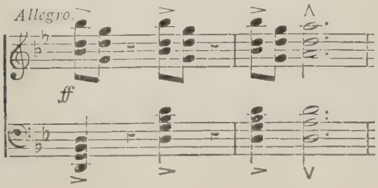
which is followed by further reiteration of Nos. 2 and 1, and leads up to a fresh section, Allegro, with this theme in the orchestra—

No. 10.



and, afterwards, this in the chorus in unison—

No. 11.

This is one of the most important themes in the work. Note particularly the last six notes, of which the composer makes great and most excellent use later on. The movement deals with the agonised Hiawatha's rushing into the forest and his piteous appeal to "The Great Spirit," Gitche Manito, for food for his dying Minnehaha. It is the only extended Allegro movement in the work, and one of the finest portions. Observe the sudden and unexpected entry of the chorus ff, after the second and more imploring of Hiawatha's supplications—

No. 12.

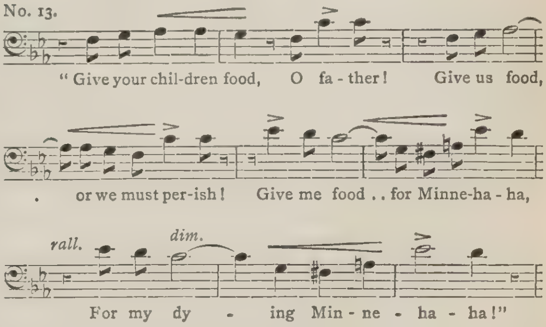
It is not often Mr. Taylor repeats words, but he was wise to do so here, and in the touching prayer, "Give your children food, O Father," where, at the words "Minnehaha," we meet again with the "cry of despair" (4 b), and a nobly impressive piece of declamation is made doubly impressive by repetition in a slightly extended form, as below—

No. 13.



"Give your chil-dren food, O fa - ther! Give us food,
. or we must per-ish! Give me food . . for Minne-ha - ha,

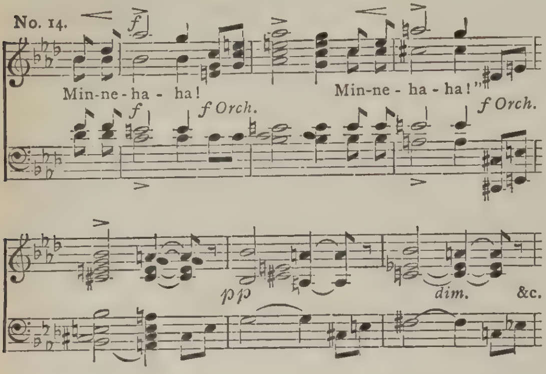
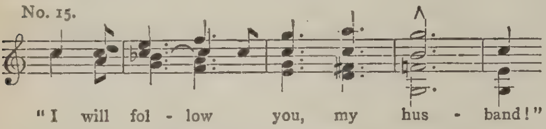
The chorus continue the story with a version of No. 1, the orchestra introducing yet further fresh material and gradually subsiding into silence as the voices relate how, to Hiawatha's cry of desolation—"... there came no other answer Than the echo of his crying."

No. 14.



When the chorus relate, to the orchestral theme No. 9, first figure, how Hiawatha roved in the "melancholy forest" through which he had brought his young wife "in that ne'er forgotten summer," we have the one ray of sunshine in the work. The time changes to a merry 6-8, though the vocal phrases seem less sprightly than those in the orchestra. In fact, the atmosphere of tragedy is not altogether absent even here. The words of Minnehaha, "I will follow you, my husband," which the poet here recalls, are set for female voices unaccompanied to one of those sweet and simple vocal phrases of which Mr. Taylor has a never failing supply—

No. 15.



This intermezzo does not last long. We are soon back in Hiawatha's wigwam, where "old Nokomis" and the "gloomy guests" are watching Minnehaha lying at death's door. Nos. 1 and 7 are here drawn upon, richly accompanied by new orchestral figures of much gentle beauty. The catastrophe now draws near and Mr. Taylor arms himself for the fray. Nor does he fail to come off victorious.

WAGNERIANA.*

More books on Wagner! Yes, the cry is still they come. The bulk of the Wagner literature consists, however, of many volumes containing the views, if not the fads, of those who seek to enlighten and instruct the world upon the art-life of the Bayreuth master. It is therefore quite refreshing, in addition to being much more interesting, to turn from all such wordiness to the perusal of some genuine Wagneriana such as Mr. Ashton Ellis has so pleasantly furnished in these two books of the master's own letters.

It is of common knowledge that Wagner's pecuniary resources were hardly of a nature that might be termed Vanderbiltian. Like unto so many geniuses, the "eternal want of pence" ever beclouded the sunshine of his idealisms. Liszt was always ready to help, not only with his noble sympathy, but also with his purse, which, of course, had its limitations; but in Herr Otto Wesendonck (who died, at the age of eighty-two, in November, 1896) Wagner found in need a friend indeed. As Mr. Ashton Ellis, in his admirable preface, says:—

> "Had it not been for Herr Otto Wesendonck's assistance during a long crisis in Wagner's financial position, it is hard to conceive how the artist could have survived to compose his later works; for Liszt was willing enough, indeed, but his income had been seriously diminished by his conflict with the Weimar theatre-management. To Wesendonck, therefore, should be assigned a place no less important in Wagner's life, than to that miracle of a King Ludwig II. of Bavaria, and that paragon of an artist Franz Liszt."

The bond of friendship between Wagner and Wesendonck was very strongly cemented. The composer's benefactor will be handed down to posterity as the prototype of one of the chief personages in "Die Meistersinger," for Wagner wrote to Wesendonck, July, 1862:—

> "In the affection with which I have treated the part of Pogner—in the music too—it really is to me as if I had been setting up a monument to a friend."

Throughout the collection of letters now made available to English readers Wagner appears as an egoist of a very pronounced type. Not, however, as the shallow-brained nonentity who is everlastingly puffing himself and his charlatancy ad nauseam, but as one who had a truly sincere belief in himself and in the cause of which he was not only the founder, but the king. As the letters to Wesendonck did not begin before the year 1852, we soon come to some communications written from London in 1855, when Wagner conducted that ill-fated season of the Philharmonic Society's concerts. And here we find the worst feature in the whole correspondence—that contained in a statement which is nothing short of scandalous. Referring to the London musical press, Wagner says:—

> "A few other reporters find the tone of Messrs. D[avison] and C[horley] too impertinent, and for that reason give temporising accounts, in which I am left with this or that good trait, but per contra this or that bad one is not gainsaid. The capability of judging me, or even impartially hearing what I give them to hear, I disallow to them all. But, for knowing what they want, the two aforesaid bear the palm: they are paid to keep me down, and thus they earn their daily bread."

The italics are ours and so is the comment: that this is an atrocious libel on the rectitude of two distinguished journalists who are beyond the reach of defending this disgraceful attack upon their integrity. With all their peculiarities, bias, and what not, it is impossible to believe that Davison and Chorley could have been capable of such out and out bribery. It is only charitable, however, to hope that Wagner, who was not in the best of tempers during his sojourn in London, was misinformed upon a matter so closely affecting the honesty of English musical criticism.

From September, 1859, until the spring of 1861 Wagner was in Paris, and much interesting information is herein given as to his residence in that city. The bitter cry of non-recognition, shattered hopes, misunderstandings, quarrels, &c., find its poignant expression in the letters from the French capital. Wagner was unsuccessful in a law suit about his house in Paris. He was short of money and very nearly had brain fever as the result of his worries and "huge exertions." "Tannhäuser," for which there were 164 rehearsals, was brought out at the opera house at a cost of about £8,000. The reception accorded to the work by the gay Parisians was disastrous, and, after three representations, Wagner withdrew the opera and himself from Paris. The Paris letters should be read seriatim in order to show Wagner's state of mind during this stormy period—one of many—of his chequered career.

Letters of Richard Wagner to Emil Heckel: with a brief history of the Bayreuth Festivals. Both volumes translated and indexed by Wm. Ashton Ellis. London: Grant Richards.
Richard Wagner: Sa vie et ses œuvres. Houston-Stewart Chamberlain. Paris: Perrin et Cie.

Amongst the many features of general interest in these attractive volumes may be mentioned a reference to Wagner's conducting of Beethoven's symphonies. He says:—

> "The 'Eroica' was small delight to me: in my indicible exertions to drive a tired-out orchestra to the height I wanted, my own pleasure in the thing was done for. To tell the truth, I no longer have a fancy for conducting Beethovenian Symphonies: I have drained them to their last drop."

In regard to the "Meistersinger" he wrote, on July 1, 1867, to Malwida von Meysenbug, who with Frau Eliza Wille form the "al" of the title-page, as follows:—

> "The 'Meistersinger' is to come out at the beginning of next winter. To that performance you must come, do you hear? It is my masterwork; not one comes up to it."

The young and subsequently mad King of Bavaria comes in for some fulsome adulation by the Master. Wagner gushingly writes from Munich, on May 4, 1864, to Frau Eliza Wille thus:—

> "Dearest Friend,
> I should be the most ungrateful of men, did I not announce to you at once my boundless good fortune!
> You know that the young King of Bavaria had me searched for. To-day I was conducted to him. Alas! he is so handsome and intelligent, so splendid and so full of soul, that I fear lest his life should vanish like a fleeting dream of gods in this vulgar world. He loves me with the depth and glow of a first love: he knows and fathoms everything about me, and understands me as my soul. He wills that I shall always stay with him, work, rest, perform my works; he will give me all I need therefor; I am to finish the Nibelungen, and he will have it performed according to my wish. I am to be my own unfettered master, not Kapellmeister, nothing but myself and his friend. And all this he means quite seriously and strictly, as if we two, yourself and I, were talking to each other. All trouble shall be taken from me; I am to have whatever I want—only, near him am I to abide.
> What do you say to it?—What do you say?—Is it not unheard of?—Can it be aught save a dream?
> Imagine how moved I am!
> A thousand hearty wishes! My happiness is so great, that I'm quite shattered by it. Of the magic of his eye you can form no notion: if only he be granted life; it is too rare a miracle!
> Richard Wagner."

A further letter relating to this Wagner-worshipping monarch includes a curious and interesting reference to a dream. Wagner writes:—

> "I have a young King who really loves me to distraction: you cannot form a notion of it! I remember a dream from my earliest youth, where I dreamt that Shakespeare was alive and I was looking at and speaking with him truly, in the flesh; its impression was never to be forgotten, and passed into the yearning to see Beethoven too, who was already dead."

The letters to Emil Heckel must be more briefly noticed, not that they are less interesting than those in the other volume, but by reason of space. Both these books should be read in their entirety. Herr Emil Heckel, "who is still a member of the Bayreuth Council of Administration—or Verwaltungsrath—was founder of the very earliest Wagner Society, and has ever been one of the staunchest and most unselfish friends of the Bayreuth cause." It is no wonder, therefore, that the letters written by Wagner to one so faithful and true in the propagation of the Meister's art-principles should be of a more or less business nature, though they are not devoid of the charm of personal interest. In a short autobiographical preface to the letters, Herr Heckel says that at Mannheim, when the "Meistersinger" was mounted, "Lachner, unable to prevent the performance itself, made cuts in the score amounting to 171 lines of verse in the first act, 137 in the second, and 345 in the third; among them, all but the opening words of Sachs' monologue, and the chorus 'Wach' auf'!" Wagner thus subsequently referred to these cuts:—

> "Do you know what? If you'd only play everything that people cut out of my works, it would last you for years."

In regard to Wagner's preparation of the Choral Symphony Herr Heckel records:—

> "At the rehearsals of the Ninth Symphony in the old Margraves' Operahouse we had fresh examples of his matchless power of working up the executants to feats above their usual level. At the beginning of the quartet, when Niemann called down to him from the so-called 'trumpeters' box' where the soloists were stationed: 'Master, if you don't beat time for me here, I cannot sing,' Wagner answered, 'I shall not beat time—for it would make the rendering stiff. You must sing this passage with absolute freedom. Such an eminent artist as yourself must be able to. That's why I chose you and the others for the quartet. I paint it for you in the air.' At the unison for the 'celli and double-basses he said: 'Gentlemen, you must know this by heart now. Look at me. There is no beating time. I draw it for you in the air. It must speak like a recitative.' The effect was marvellous."

Wagner's arrangement of the orchestra for a concert at Mannheim is given in the following plan:—

Herr Heckel records:—

> "After discussing with Liszt the rendering of a fugue of Bach's from the 'Wohltemperirtes Klavier,' Wagner played it with convincing emphasis on his particular reading. Beyond the family, only Frau von Meyendorf from Weimar, my wife and myself, were present. Wagner and Liszt fell reminding each other of the best waltzes written at the time of their youth. Liszt played from memory those of Strauss, and Wagner those of Lanner. We danced to them. 'Herr Heckel,' said Frau von Meyendorf, 'never have I danced to such good playing. Wagner and Liszt as dance-musicians!' The word was taken up by both the masters, and unforced gaiety prevailed the evening long."

The work of translation attains that high standard of excellence which characterises all Mr. Ashton Ellis's work in Wagnerian fields of literature. What more can be said? But is it too unkind to point out a misprint on p. 29—"1872" instead of "1892"? The words "and indexed," which appear on both title-pages, are, if somewhat unusual, fully justifiable. Is not Mr. Ashton Ellis an ideal indexer?

The third volume on our list is a French translation of Mr. Houston-Stewart Chamberlain's notable biography of Wagner, and, therefore, it is only necessary to mention it. As, however, it appears without the illustrations that are so marked a feature of the German and English editions, the work in this respect can hardly rank with M. Adolf Jullien's sumptuous monograph in the French language on the Bayreuth master.

CHURCH MUSIC.

The London Church Congress forms a record as regards the consideration of sacred art in the history of these great annual assemblies. The earnest and practical words upon the subject delivered by qualified and eminent speakers, together with the fine performances in Westminster Abbey and the Albert Hall of a choice assortment of illustrations, including some of the noblest pieces of English Church music, not only made the occasion memorable, but will ensure the further recognition and study of music suitable for Church use at these important meetings. There is a practical side to this wide question, which seems specially to demand the consideration and judgment of the heads of the profession. This is the simple question of relative difficulty in the execution of Church music. In order that the attention of choristers and instrumentalists shall not be distracted and so carried away from the foundation raison d'être of Church music, as emphatically a medium of worship, such music should not be so elaborate in texture as to absorb too completely in its performance the attention and thought of the performers.

At the historic chapel of the Foundling Hospital the anthem at the Harvest Thanksgiving was Wesley's "The Wilderness," in which both the choir and the well-trained children took part, under the direction of Mr. Davan Wetton. The musical service at the Parish Church, Portsmouth, held on the 1st ult., under the direction of Mr. R. H. Turner, included a sacred song, "Lift up your heart," from his pen, and Stainer's "Ye shall dwell in the land." The anthems at St. Alphege, London Wall, sung during the Harvest Festival Services, were Maunder's "Sing to the Lord of the Harvest" and Sydenham's "O give thanks unto the Lord." Mr. A. C. Tattersall played a selection of standard organ music. At St. Luke's, Hackney, the first and second parts of Haydn's "Creation" formed an appropriate selection of harvest music. The accompaniments were given on organ and pianoforte by Mr. G. T. Pinches and Mr. F. S. March. The music at the season's festival at St. Bede's, Liverpool, included the late Dr. Garrett's fine Harvest Cantata, given under the direction of the organist, Mr. E. H. Smith.

Of special interest to musical church goers, is the resumption of the orchestral services at Brixton Church. On the 1st ult. the first three movements from Mendelssohn's "Italian" Symphony and Beethoven's noble "Egmont" Overture were played.

Upon the occasion of the Harvest Festival at Kew Church, the vicar, the Rev. W. H. Bliss, referred in his sermon to the work done in connection with the excellent choir of the church by Mr. Breadmore, who has resigned the office of choirmaster after twenty years' service, and the present holder of the same office, Mr. E. Geere, who, with Mr. H. E. Warner as organist, now directs the Kew choir.

Maunder's cantata "Penitence, Pardon, and Peace" was lately sung at St. John's Episcopal Church, Perth; Mr. F. Midgley played the accompaniments.

An excellent rendering of Dr. Garrett's popular Harvest Cantata was recently given in the stately old Collegiate Church, Stafford. Dr. E. W. Taylor conducted, and Mr. W. Scarlett presided at the organ.

The St. German's Patronal Festival was, as usual, held at Cardiff from the 1st to the 8th ult., when Gounod's "Messe Solennelle" and Jordan's Communion Service in E were sung with brass accompaniment. On the 4th ult. the second part of "Elijah" was rendered by the choir (assisted by the St. German's Oratorio Choir) and an orchestra of twenty-six, led by Mr. E. T. Roberts. Mr. Geo. Beale, organist of Llandaff Cathedral, ably fulfilled the duties of organist, and Mr. W. H. Higgins, organist, &c., of the church, as usual, conducted. The solos, &c., were all taken by members of the choir. Performances of "St. Paul" and the "Hymn of Praise" have already been given at this church, and that they are much appreciated is clearly shown by the large congregations which attend.

The Dedication Festival at St. Paul's, Harringay, took place on the 11th ult., when Mendelssohn's "Lauda Sion" was sung, with orchestral accompaniment (leader, Mr. A. J. Dye). Mr. J. Penn Titterton presided at the organ, and Mr. Charles R. Kemshead, organist of the church, conducted.

ORGAN MUSIC.

The organ case in Westminster Abbey is now complete. At the suggestion of the organist, Sir Frederick Bridge, Purcell's coat of arms will adorn one of the vacant shields forming part of the design of excellent decorative art in connection with the fine specimen of the instrument, which above all other instruments lends itself with advantage to the art of the designer.

At St. Nicholas' Parish Church, Sutton, Surrey, an admirable new three-manual organ has been supplied by Messrs. Norman and Beard. The stops, when complete, will number thirty-six, with seven couplers and eight composition pedals. The opening recital was given by Mr. W. Stevenson Hoyte, whose excellent programme included his own effective Scherzo, together with Overture in C (Alfred Hollins), Offertoire in B flat (King Hall), Cantilène (Wheeldon), and Meditation (d'Evry); a substantial recognition of modern English organ music. On the 11th ult. Mr. Owen H. Mead re-opened the organ at Norwood Parish Church (Middlesex), after restoration by Messrs. Noble and Son. Mr. Mead's programme included Dr. Rea's well-known Air with variations, two movements by Salomé, and two by Guilmant. Mr. A. Lambert recently gave a recital at St. Paul's, Hemel Hempstead. The list of pieces included Mendelssohn's Air with variations in D and Melody in C by John E. West.

To go far afield in British Dominions, we note recitals by Mr. Maughan Barnett, at St. John's, Wellington, New Zealand, with a programme including two pieces by Dubois and two by Widor; by Mr. Roger Ascham, at the Feather Market Hall, Port Elizabeth, including Hollins's Grand Chœur in G minor and Saint-Saëns's Fantasia in E flat.

At St. Michael's and All Angels', Portsmouth, Mr. Percy Ramsey gave a recital during the past month. His programme included Bach's Prelude and Fugue in C major, "Visione" (Rheinberger), and other pieces. Mr. J. M. Preston, at St. George's, Newcastle-on-Tyne, has given three recitals during the past month, the programmes of which included Toccata and Fugue in C (Bach), Prelude Pastoral (Böellmann), "Fantasia or Suite on texts from Holy Scripture" (Hans Huber), Fest Hymn (Heintz), Sonata (Kühmstedt), and Allegretto (Louis Vierne).

On September 29 Mr. Harry Evans gave an organ recital at the Tegid Memorial Calvinistic Church, Bala. Mr. Evans's performance — upon a good instrument recently built by Conacher—was greatly appreciated, his selections being from Mendelssohn, Rinck, Dubois, Batiste, Elgar, &c.

The organ in Woodberry Down Baptist Chapel, of which Mr. Arthur Cherry is organist, after additions thereto and cleaning, was recently re-opened by Mr. Fountain Meen, who played Mendelssohn's Sonata in C minor, Cantilène in A flat (Wolstenholme), Overture in D (Henry Smart), and "Imperial" March (Edward Elgar).

Recitals were given in connection with the dedication of the new organ at St. Clement's Church, Ilford, on the 5th and 7th ult., by Messrs. A. H. Allen and H. L. Balfour. The solos included Mendelssohn's first and fifth Organ Sonatas, Mr. Hoyte's Scherzo, Overture (No. 2) in C minor (Alfred Hollins), and Canzona (Wolstenholme). At St. Paul's, Liverpool, on the 8th ult., Mr. W. A. Roberts gave a recital, the scheme of which included Saint-Saëns's Fantasia in E flat major; Mendelssohn's "Notturno" in E (from the "Midsummer Night's Dream" music), which lends itself extremely well to the organ; and "The Angelus," from Massenet's "Scènes Pittoresques." On the 8th ult., at Thirsk Parish Church, in connection with the Harvest Festival, Mr. S. H. Fall gave a recital, his scheme including Sonata (Fumagalli) and Toccata (Mailly). Mr. I. Herbert Stammers gave a recital at St. Agnes' Church, Liverpool, on the 14th ult., when his programme included Mendelssohn's first Organ Sonata, Prelude and Fugue in C major (Bach), and "Legend and Finale," one of a set of "Six Organ Pieces," by W. Faulkes.

The attractive recitals given by Mr. E. H. Lemare, at St. Margaret's, Westminster, have been resumed. The programmes for the 7th and 14th ult. included brilliant renderings of several important organ works, as Bach's Prelude and Fugue in D major and Toccata and Fugue in D minor. A new Romance by H. A. Wheeldon was given for the first time. Mr. E. H. Lemare's programme on the 21st ult. included Bach's stately Toccata in F, his own Romance in D flat, and an arrangement of Dvorák's Overture "In der Natur."

Mr. Fountain Meen's programme at St. Michael's and All Angels', Stoke Newington Common, on the 1st ult., consisted of "Offertoire sur deux Noëls," Guilmant; Fugue in E flat, J. S. Bach; "Sunset" Melody, Dr. C. Vincent; Allegro moderato, Dr. E. J. Hopkins; Cantilène in A flat, Wolstenholme; and Elgar's "Imperial" March.

At All Souls' Church, Halifax, Mr. J. Herbert England frequently gives interesting recitals. The latest programme includes "Marche Solennelle," Mailly; Canon in B minor, Schumann; and Marche Triomphale, Guiraud. Mr. J. Froggitt lately gave the monthly recital at St. Peter's, Stockton-on-Tees. His scheme included Widor's Organ Symphony (No. 5), Tours's very effective Fantasia in C, and Marche Triomphale (Grison). Mr. G. Leake gave a recital at St. Mark's Church, Southampton, his programme including Bach's beautiful and poetical Prelude and Fugue in B minor and movements by Guilmant and Salomé. Mr. Wolstenholme played at Blackburn, on the 16th ult., his Grand Chœur in G minor, composed for Mr. F. Archer's 300th recital at the Carnegie Institute, Pittsburgh, U.S.A., on the 23rd ult. At Holy Trinity Church, Esclusham, Mr. J. Pullein recently gave a recital, playing, among other pieces, Lemare's Andantino in D flat and the Finale of Widor's Fourth Organ Symphony.

NORWICH MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

There will always be grumblers at every Festival programme, but I think it must be allowed that the programme of the Norwich Musical Festival of last month—the 3rd to the 6th ult. is the precise date—went far towards the impossible feat of conciliating all tastes. Conservative feeling, and the difficulties of adequate rehearsal that always beset us, were both met by the inclusion of the "Hymn of Praise" and the evergreen "Messiah"; to which, in view of its popularity, may be added the "Faust" of Berlioz. Concerning these it is sufficient to say that in all points they were adequately performed, while as regards the chorus, it excelled all Norwich choruses for a good many festivals back, singing with an unwonted vigour and freshness. I was told that Mr. Randegger had given up a considerable portion of his holiday to a stay at Norwich, during which he thoroughly drilled his choir in their work. Judging from results, it was well worth the sacrifice, though I trust that the consciousness of virtue will not be the only reward he will meet with. Eastern counties voices are of course not so robust, or so fine in quality, as those of some more favoured districts; yet the chorus as a whole had a volume of tone that was quite sufficient to fill St. Andrew's Hall and was never unpleasant in quality.

For the outside public the interest of a festival centres in the new works it brings forth. There was not a single choral work written for the Festival, or even heard for the first time on the occasion. Perosi's "Passion Music" (according to St. Mark) was the nearest approach, for it had never previously been heard in this country. Apart from its musical merits, it must be said that it was heard under the most unfavourable conditions possible at Norwich. I do not allude to its performance, for that was thoroughly good, but to the fact that a concert-room does not afford the right environment for purely devotional Church music. No better work for Lenten Services could be imagined, for it is reverent, free from sentimentality and sensationalism, and the purely musical interest is never so great as to divert one's attention from the text. This is, however, no recommendation to the concert-room, and from this point of view the "Passion Music" must be pronounced an exceedingly monotonous work. The soloists, two narrators and the representative of Christ, are all baritones, unless one includes in their numbers a tenor to whom a single phrase is accorded. Here again that which makes the work all the fitter for Church use militates against its success as a concert work. As I have said, it suffered nothing in performance under Mr. Randegger's careful and sympathetic direction, while in the solo parts Messrs. Andrew Black, Bispham, Radford, and Mitton were thoroughly satisfactory.

The most extended and elaborate of the works commissioned for the Festival was Mr. Edward German's. This was yet another orchestral suite, but more highly developed than any of its predecessors. It bore the title "The Seasons," and, as may be expected, consisted of four movements. In the ingenuity with which the materials are developed, and in the extreme elaboration of the scoring, this suite reaches perhaps the highest point of any of Mr. German's works; but it is in my mind an open question whether the work would not gain by slight condensation and by somewhat greater breadth of treatment. The multiplicity of details is so great that only a sight of the score would enable one to take them all in, and, after all, music is intended for the ear, not for the eye. It is not like a piece of Gothic ornament, over whose intricate detail the eye may wander at will, for each phrase can in performance be apprehended only as and when it is presented. At the same time, this is a criticism that assumes the highest standpoint, and no praise can be too strong for the remarkable power which the suite shows in the ever varying treatment and development of the thematic material. As for the themes themselves, they are, if not particularly fresh, thoroughly characteristic of the composer. One of them, however, a dainty little tune in the "Summer" section, is quite remarkable for its delightful freshness and spontaneity. It has all the naïve charm of a Volkslied. The suite is obviously a work presenting great difficulties to the executants, but under Mr. German's conductorship it was very satisfactorily played, when the limited opportunities for rehearsal are taken into consideration.

The other two novelties were also by native composers of the younger generation, men who differ from their artistic forbears in that they seem to think in the orchestral idiom. They do not construct a pianoforte score and then adapt it to the orchestra. Mr. Elgar is a master of broad and vigorous colouring, but in the cycle of songs entitled "Sea Pictures" (Op. 37), written for, and finely sung by, Miss Clara Butt, he has shown that he can also appreciate the style of the miniaturist. Indeed, I incline to think that in these five songs, whose words are taken from various sources, Mr. Elgar has been the happiest in those he has treated with the lightest hand. "In Haven," with its constantly repeated figure of accompaniment, might be styled a trifle; but it is like the sketch of a master, better than the most highly finished productions of a laborious duffer. So is the even more beautiful "Where corals lie," with its quaintly Oriental turns of melody. Of the others, the "Sea slumber-song" is full of tender grace, while in the remaining two the composer has adopted something more like what Sir Walter Scott dubbed the "big bow-wow" style; with his accustomed skill, but with rather less convincing results.

One of the chief successes of the Festival was scored—I use the word quite innocent of any double motive—by Mr. Coleridge-Taylor, who conducted his cantata "Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast," preceded by the new "Overture to the Song of Hiawatha." As regards the cantata, I must say at once that I have never heard it go better, and the impression made by its fresh poetic beauty, underlaid by a distinct vein of humour, was deep as well as immediate. It is a great achievement for so young a composer to have made his début with a work on which there is the stamp of unmistakable originality, without any apparent straining after that quality. Here and there in the structure you may find a brick whose make is familiar to you, but the building as a whole is the product of an original mind. The overture is a very fine piece of work, more lofty and serious in character than the "Wedding-Feast," for the obvious reason that it is to prelude other scenes from the "Song of Hiawatha" that are much more sombre in colouring. It has, however, much of the same open-air feeling, the same melodic beauty and vigour of rhythm.

Coming to the more familiar works, we had a fine performance of Verdi's recent sacred works, the beautiful "Stabat Mater" and Te Deum, and a really memorable rendering of the "Laudi alla Vergine," sung to perfection by four Royal Academy students—Misses Ethel Wood, Kelyn Williams, Julia Franks, and Ethel Nutter. This was, indeed, one of the supreme moments of the Festival, and, for once, one could not blame Mr. Randegger for yielding to the demand for repetition, particularly as the young ladies acquitted themselves almost better on the re-hearing, if that were possible. Another notable performance was that of Mr. Cowen's setting of Collins's ode, "The Passions." It was conducted by the composer, and was sung with a smartness that rivalled the Leeds performance of last year. I can hardly believe that any choral work has ever been better sung by a Norwich chorus. Sir Hubert Parry's "Song of Darkness and Light" was a welcome revival of another Festival work. Miss Ethel Wood's highly intelligent and sympathetic reading of the solos was a feature of the performance, though a slightly veiled tone in some of her notes would seem to indicate that this clever young singer will do well to use her voice with more discretion.

An ample Wagner selection, of which the fine singing by Miss Brema and Mr. Bispham in the last scene from "Die Walküre" was the most notable feature, a fairly good performance of the "Pathetic" Symphony, and a fine one of Saint-Saëns's "Samson and Delilah," in which Miss Brema and Mr. Edward Lloyd took the chief parts and sang with remarkable dramatic power, were among the more important things remaining to be mentioned. The principal vocalists were, in addition to those I have already named, Madame Albani and Mr. Ben Davies, while Mr. G. H. Betjemann was the leader of a capital band of seventy-six London players. Dr. Horace Hill, as heretofore, discharged the duties of Festival choirmaster, while Dr. Bunnett deserves a word of acknowledgment for his discreet use of the organ. It would, by the way, give the chorus an even better chance for distinction were the instrument in St. Andrew's Hall tuned to the normal diapason. Perhaps this reform will come before 1902.

SCARBOROUGH MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

The Festival which took place at Scarborough, on the 18th and 19th ult., is remarkable not only as the first of its kind held there, but as the first Festival conducted by Mr. F. H. Cowen. It is some mark of the appreciation in which he is held in Yorkshire that Mr. Cowen should now be conductor of a Festival, an important choral society, and a large orchestra in that county. He certainly had not a little to do with the artistic success of the Scarborough event. Its financial position is less certain, and it seems likely that the guarantors may be called upon to some small extent. It is to be hoped that this may not damp their ardour, for what was achieved on this occasion was so good as to make its repetition highly desirable.

As for the chorus, its composition was singular, the male voices being outnumbered by the female in the proportion of more than two to one The exact numbers were: sopranos, 139; altos, 77; tenors, 42; basses, 67. That the men were not out-voiced as well as out-numbered indicates some weakness in the women's sections, and there can be no doubt that, among the sopranos particularly, there were some who not only did little to swell the body of tone, but detracted materially from the efficiency of the chorus; for a chorus resembles a squadron, whose pace is regulated by the slowest ship.

Three choral works were given. "St. Paul," at the opening concert, was really well sung. It had never before been given in Scarborough, at least on anything like so complete a scale; but the idiom at least is familiar, and the choruses were thoroughly well done. Mr Cowen inspired confidence by his clear beat and his excellent habit of letting no cue take care of itself, and the singing was clean and intelligent. Sullivan's "Golden Legend" was also a generally good choral performance, though the unaccompanied pieces found out the weaknesses of the untried members of the chorus, whose power of keeping the pitch accurately was not great. The most difficult task for the singers was in Mr. Cowen's own Leeds work, his setting of Collins's poem "The Passions"; and though it was sung with the utmost heartiness and good intention by a chorus who knew how much they owed to their conductor, the result was not as finished as might be, even without reference to the high standard set by the brilliant performances at the Leeds and Norwich Festivals.

The most satisfactory feature of the Festival was, on the whole, the excellent orchestra of sixty-five players, all but three—and those thoroughly efficient local artists—hailing from London, with Mr. Edward O'Brien as the very able leader. They gave a performance of Beethoven's C minor Symphony that deserves to be styled brilliant, the refinement of the wood-wind being especially notable. As pieces of orchestral virtuosity the Air and Variations from Tschaïkowsky's Suite in G and the first of Liszt's Rhapsodies deserve mention, being very smartly played. Schumann's Pianoforte Concerto, with Miss Fanny Davies as soloist, was an important feature of the programme. The "Tannhäuser" Overture and the orchestral work in the "Golden Legend" also furnished the band with work worthy of its powers, and throughout it may be said to have given the Scarborough people a new sensation.

For the rest, it may suffice to briefly record that the principal soprano was Miss Helen Jaxon, whose fine style and unaffected manner gave her singing a decided charm; that the contralto, Miss Florence Oliver, made her happiest effort in the well-known air of Delilah in Saint-Saëns's "Samson and Delilah," and that the other principals were Mr. Lloyd Chandos and Mr. Andrew Black, while a couple of minor parts were taken by Mr. Kelly, a local singer. As chorus-master and organist, Mr. C. T. Pateman had a useful, if unassuming share in the success of the Festival.

RICHTER CONCERTS.

A brilliant audience that crowded every part of the Queen's Hall delighted in welcoming Hans Richter back to London on the 23rd ult. The warmth of the great conductor's reception equalled the enthusiasm with which the performances under his baton were received; and when we mention that the programme included the "Meistersinger" Overture, the "Pathetic" Symphony—which is becoming more pathetically hackneyed every day—and Mr. Edward Elgar's brilliant and beautiful Variations, few of our readers will fail to picture the scenes of white-heat enthusiasm enacted on that evening inside the cheerful Hall in Langham Place. Mr. Elgar's work secured for the composer a spontaneously warm "call." Since the orchestration was revised and greatly improved in a number of places, and an imposing, exciting, and brilliantly scored Coda added after the first performance in St. James's Hall a few months ago, the splendid work appears perfect, and "fit to go anywhere" to be an honour to British art. A new Pianoforte Concerto in E minor, by Herr von Dohnányi, superbly played by the composer-pianist, was the novelty. The work seems to have gained a prize somewhere, and "Prize Concerto" seems to be written plainly over its many scores of pages. It is very long, very difficult, very elaborate, very serious, but it somehow failed to convince us. The opening tutti promises well, although, or rather because it recalls in its impressive austerity the opening of Brahms's First Symphony; even to the resolutely held pedal. There are of course some beaux moments, but also the mauvais quart d'heure, which we relished not. We may alter our opinion when we hear the work again, for Herr von Dohnányi is an exceptionally gifted youth, as we had good reason to testify a few months ago.

ELDERHORST CHAMBER CONCERTS.

These concerts were resumed on the 23rd ult., at the Steinway Hall. The feature of the evening was the first performance in London of Dr. Bernard Scholz's Pianoforte Quartet in F minor (Op. 79), which was excellently interpreted by Miss Fanny Davies and Messrs. Elderhorst, Hobday, and Whitehouse. The Quartet, as may be imagined from the pen of so experienced a musician, is thoroughly well written and on orthodox lines. The last movement is the most attractive. It commences with vivacious vigour which is well sustained until the close. The vocalist was Miss Agnes Witting, who sang with great charm a selection of songs by Robert Franz.

PROMENADE CONCERTS.

Mr. Henry J. Wood's supply of novelties seems inexhaustible, and, for the most part, the pieces brought forward have proved worthy of the publicity given them, or possessed interest owing to their being the productions of esteemed composers.

An attractive clarinet solo with pianoforte accompaniment, entitled "Tango," by Mr. Manuel Gomez and Mr. Percy Pitt (the former being responsible for the themes and the latter for their treatment), was played for the first time by the composers on September 23, and will doubtless be often heard in concert-rooms. Mr. Vincent d'Indy is one of the most promising of modern French composers, and consequently interest was attached to the "Chanson et Danses" (Op. 50) for flute, oboe, two clarinets, horn, and two bassoons, which was produced in this country on the same evening as the "Tango."

Balakireff's "Overture on three Russian Themes" was brought to a hearing on September 26. The themes chosen are the folk-songs "Lo! no white birch tree stood near the field," "In the field stood the little birch tree," and "She went to a feast." Balakireff was a musical patriot, and he has treated his country's music in a deferential manner, and the result, if unpretentious, is pleasing.

The following night the first performance in London was given of Tschaïkowsky's Third Symphony in D (Op. 29), named, but not by the composer, "The Polish." The mastery of contrapuntal resource, the ingenious development of the themes, and the sustained power of the music are very striking. Tschaïkowsky also provided the novelty on September 28, when was played the Cossack dance from the first Act of his opera "Mazeppa," produced at Moscow in 1884. As may be imagined, the dance is essentially barbaric in style. On the 3rd ult. the orchestral arrangement of his popular pianoforte piece, "Chant sans Paroles," the third of three solos entitled "Souvenirs de Hapsal," was heard for the first time in England and proved to be very effectively scored.

A "Suite de Ballet," by Herr Mottl, based upon airs from Rameau's "Comedie-ballet," entitled "Platée," in three acts, produced in 1749, and on the same composer's "Opéra-ballet" named "Les Fêtes d'Hébé," first performed in 1739, was brought forward on the 5th ult. The piece forms a companion suite to Herr Mottl's arrangement of airs from the operas by Gluck and is of equal interest.

On the 7th ult. two vivacious Polish folk-dances, richly scored for orchestra by M. Moritz Moszkowski, were played. The first, a "Mazurka," is very pretty and dansante. The second, a "Krakowiak," is a busy and strongly accentuated piece.

Dvorák's latest symphonic poem (Op. 110), entitled "Die Waldtaube" ("The Wild Dove"), was performed, for the first time in London, on the 10th ult. This is programme music of the frankest kind, and its five sections illustrate seriatim the incidents of J. K. Erben's ballad. The music has the great merit of being terse and singularly clear in construction.

Two Dances for orchestra, severally a Serenade in gavotte measure and a Revel, or rustic dance, by Mr. Wallace Sutcliffe, enlivened the programme of the 12th ult., and well merit future performances.

A new suite, entitled "Cinderella," by Mr. Percy Pitt, was produced on the 14th ult., and proved a very attractive and cleverly written piece. It is in five movements, which severally illustrate—(1) "Cinderella's distress at being left behind while her sisters are taken to the ball"; (2) "The advent of the Fairy Godmother"; (3) The Ball; (4) "Prince Charming and Cinderella"; (5) Wedding Festivities. Of these the most important are the first, third, and fifth. The opening number at once creates a favourable impression by the expressiveness of its themes, the smoothness of the part-writing, and the well-nourished character of the orchestration. The Ball scene is illustrated by a charming waltz, rhythmic and dainty, and decidedly original. The Wedding scene is opened and closed with a gay march, in which a touch of the pompous admirably suggests the court officials. The suite was very warmly received, and the composer much applauded upon his appearance on the platform.

A very satisfactory feature of the recent series of these concerts is the opportunities that have been afforded to young British composers. An overture entitled "Touchstone," by Mr. W. H. Reed, one of the most promising of these, was produced for the first time on the 17th ult., and proved worthy of the hearty applause which followed its performance. Its themes are bright and melodious and the orchestration well balanced.

A composer, M. Jules Bleichmann, new to English audiences, was introduced on the 19th ult., with a Suite de Ballet. This is in six movements, severally headed—(1) Overture, (2) Danse des Bouffons, (3) Danse Orientale, (4) Danse des feux follets, (5) Vision, (6) Valse. Of these the most attractive are the second, fifth, and sixth. The second is decidedly humorous, the fifth full of charm of a feminine kind, and the valse is graceful and dansante. At this concert there was also performed a Septet for trumpet, pianoforte, and strings (Op. 69), by M. Saint-Saëns, which proved decidedly interesting. It comprises a Preambule, Menuet and Trio, Intermède, and Gavotte and Finale. The music is Handelian in style and full of vivacity. The season concluded on the 21st ult.

AN ELGAR CONCERT AT WINDSOR.

The annual concert of the Choir of St. George's Chapel Royal was given in the Albert Institute, Windsor, on the 18th ult., and drew together a large and appreciative audience, including H.R.H. Princess Christian and her two daughters, Princess Aribert of Anhalt and Princess Victoria of Schleswig-Holstein.

Sir Walter Parratt, the director of this famous choir, has been in the habit of devoting a considerable portion of the programme of these concerts to the works of some living composer and inviting him to superintend their performance in person. On this occasion the composer who thus honoured and was honoured by the choir was Mr. Edward Elgar, who contributed no less than ten out of the twenty numbers of which the programme consisted, appearing in each case either as conductor or accompanist. The versatility of Mr. Elgar's genius was well shown by the works presented, and the preponderance of one man's ideas was far from producing any sense of monotony. No contrast could be greater than that between the graceful part-song "O happy eyes," in the early part of the programme, and the unconventional madrigal, "To the Queen," with which the concert very appropriately closed.

The refined singing of the St. George's choristers was heard to much advantage in the beautiful two-part song "Doubt not thy Father's care," from "The Light of Life" ("Lux Christi"), with its fascinating accompaniment and delightfully naïve points of canonic imitation; and no less so in the attractive three-part song "The Snow," in which the obbligato parts for two violins were sympathetically played by Miss Ida Nutt and Mr. Hubert Hunt, the latter an old chorister. "King Olaf" provided a gem of a quartet, "As torrents in summer," so well sung by Master Edwards and Messrs. Smith, Kearton, and Kempton that it narrowly escaped an encore; and "Caractacus" furnished Mr. Eaton Cooter with "The Sword Song," which he declaimed with such dramatic vigour, backed up in the refrain by the gentlemen of the choir, that the performance had to be repeated. Mr. Whitehouse showed his own quiet style and Mr. Elgar's skill as a song-writer by bringing forward a thoughtful setting of old Simon Wastell's quaint and solemn words "Like to the damask rose you see," and Mr. Hubert Hunt joined the composer in an agreeably contrasted pair of violin and pianoforte duets, entitled "Chanson de Nuit" and "Chanson de Matin." Two numbers of the beautiful choral songs "From the Bavarian Highlands," already familiar to a Windsor audience, completed the interesting tale of Mr. Elgar's contributions to the concert.

Of the rest of the programme it is unnecessary to speak in detail. Dr. C. H. Lloyd conducted his exacting five-part song, "When first I came to Court," recently produced by the Magpie Madrigal Society, at St. James's Hall, and joined Sir Walter Parratt in five clever descriptive pieces for two pianofortes by the Russian composer, Arensky, entitled "Silhouettes." The gentlemen of the choir displayed their rich and well-balanced voices in a fine, but unfamiliar glee, "Music, all powerful," by the elder Walmisley; and in Webbe's punning round, "Would you know my Celia's charms," they displayed an amount of histrionic talent which must have astonished those who had never seen them out of cassocks and surplices. Various solos completed a highly interesting programme. Mr. H. E. Carver proved as usual an efficient accompanist, and Mr. Bell Kempton a courteous secretary.

CRYSTAL PALACE CONCERTS.

The forty-fourth annual series of the Saturday afternoon concerts commenced on the 7th ult., under the conductorship of Mr. August Manns. The veteran musician, who has served his art so long and so faithfully at Sydenham, had a cordial welcome from a numerous audience, and began the new season with an excellent interpretation of Mozart's Symphony in E flat. Subsequently the first performance in England was given of Benjamin Godard's "Concerto for violin, with accompaniment for orchestra," to quote the description of the work which heads the score. It was written for M. Johannes Wolff and its chief merit is that it affords the soloist ample opportunities to display brilliancy of technique. It is in the usual three movements, the last of which is very bright and lively. M. Wolff played excellently, but the music was coldly received. Mr. Frederick Dawson gave a praiseworthy reading of the solo part of Schumann's Pianoforte Concerto, and the vocalist was Madame Blanche Marchesi.

On the following Saturday the afternoon was occupied with M. Saint-Saëns's Biblical opera "Samson and Delilah," sung in English, but from a different translation to that provided for the audience. The title-rôles were finely embodied by Mr. Ben Davies and Miss Marie Brema, the latter artist in particular giving a reading of the part which, for intensity and subtlety combined with refinement of expression, it would be difficult to surpass. The part of the High Priest was taken by Mr. Daniel Price and that of Abimelech and the Aged Hebrew by Mr. Charles Knowles. The other characters were sustained by Messrs. Frederick Ranalow, Robert Radford, and Charles Lunn.

The concert on the 21st ult. opened with Dvorák's Symphonic Poem (Op. 111), entitled "Heldenlied" ("Heroic Song"), which had been performed for the first time in England the preceding evening at the Queen's Hall Promenade Concerts. The composer has emphasised the lyrical rather than the dramatic element in his treatment of the subject, and this is probably the reason why the work fails to impress the listener to the extent anticipated by the themes chosen by the composer. The most attractive portion is that headed Poco adagio lagrimoso, but several other sections excite interest and the esteem of the musician by reason of the grace and naïveness of the melodies and their picturesque scoring. A feature of this concert was the re-appearance of Señor Sarasate, who, in Max Bruch's beautiful Violin Concerto in G minor, and some smaller pieces, played with exquisite silvery quality of tone and the utmost refinement of expression. Beethoven's Second Symphony in D concluded the programme. The vocalist was Miss Tilly Koenen.

MR. COLERIDGE-TAYLOR AT ETON.

It was probably by an undesigned coincidence that the neighbouring choirs of St. George's Chapel, Windsor, and of Eton College gave their annual concerts during the same week, and that each secured the presence of a well-known composer. The Eton Chapel choir had for its hero of the evening Mr. Coleridge-Taylor, and a large proportion of the programme was devoted to his works. Two very characteristic lyrics, "An African Love-Song" and "Jessy," sympathetically sung by Mr. James W. Dempster and charmingly accompanied by the composer, elicited enthusiastic applause. They were succeeded by two "Gipsy Movements" for violin solo, exquisitely played by Miss Lucy Stone, with the composer at the pianoforte. This lady's purity of tone, artistic phrasing, and neatness of execution fully sustained her reputation as a leading exponent of the Joachim school. These two performers were subsequently joined by Mr. Edward Mason on the violoncello in Mr. Coleridge-Taylor's "Characteristic Waltzes"—a composition not perhaps heard at its best with this particular combination of instruments, but nevertheless proving very effective. As specimens of his choral writing a forcible part-song with pianoforte accompaniment, "Land of the Sun," was sung by the whole choir, and two poetic three-part songs for trebles and altos, "How they so softly rest" and "We strew these opiate flowers," were sung with considerable refinement, under the composer's direction, the accompaniment being played by the College Precentor, Dr. C. H. Lloyd.

The anniversary of Trafalgar no doubt suggested the introduction of "The Death of Nelson," which was so well sung by Mr. Herbert W. Howard that he had to sing again. Mr. Edward Mason, one of the music-masters of the school, created quite a furore by his rendering of Goltermann's well-known Etude Caprice for violoncello, and he was associated with Mr. W. Rowe in Piatti's setting of Tennyson's graceful poem, "O swallow, swallow." Other solos were contributed by the gentlemen of the choir, among them Monk Gould's "The Curfew," admirably sung by the energetic secretary, Mr. W. Dodds, who would have responded to an encore had time allowed. Abt's cheery part-song, "How can a bird help singing," brought the concert to a conclusion. With a few exceptions the accompaniments were played by Mr. H. R. Couldrey, organist of Holy Trinity Church, Windsor, and assistant-organist of Eton College Chapel.

THE ORGAN IN THE CHURCH HOUSE.

The Great Hall of the Church House, Westminster, has received its fitting complement by the erection of a three-manual organ, built by Messrs. Lewis and Co., Limited. This instrument, the munificent gift of the Hon. Richard Strutt, is placed in the East gallery, the console, in the North gallery, being about thirty feet away from the main structure. The wind of the entire organ is on 3½-inch pressure, and is generated by the Ross Valve Company's high-pressure hydraulic engine with rotary valve, which, with the bellows, is placed in the basement of the building. The oak case was made by Messrs. Elliot and Co., of Newbury, from designs by Sir Arthur Blomfield, A.R.A.

The organ was "opened" by Sir Walter Parratt, on the 7th ult., in the presence of an audience, or congregation, that completely filled the fine building. The following was Sir Walter's programme:—

Overture—"Otho" .. .. Introduction—Fugue—Gavotte.	Handel.
Improvisation	Rheinberger.
Fantasia in G minor (unpublished)	C. H. H. Parry.
Lamentation	Guilmant.
Choral Prelude	J. S. Bach.
Largo (from the "New World" Symphony)	Dvorák.
Choral Vorspiel und Fuge über—"O Traurigkeit, O Herzeleid"	Brahms.
Præludium und Fuge in F	Buxtehude.

There is no need to expatiate upon the manner in which the Master of the Queen's Music interpreted the above pieces. Is not his reputation as an organist of the highest rank known and read of all men? And it certainly did not suffer on this occasion. It may seem almost heretical to find fault with the programme, but notwithstanding the Ecclesiastical atmosphere of the Church House and the Church Congress, was it not a trifle severe for a general audience? One of its most interesting features was Sir Hubert Parry's unpublished Fantasia in G minor, which, although by so typical an English composer as the Director of the Royal College of Music, was not without traces of the best German influence—J. S. Bach to wit. Sir Walter Parratt's predilection for Choral Preludes was interestingly illustrated in two specimens of that genus—Bach representing the ancient and Brahms, the other great "B.," the modern. In order to aid the audience in recognising the melody of the Bach chorale, Sir Walter "played over" the first strain in its simple form. It proved to be the setting in B flat of "Valet will ich dir geben," known in this country in its association with the words "All glory, laud, and honour." Buxtehude, whom Bach in his youth walked half-a-hundred miles to hear, is not known so well in England as he deserves to be. The Prelude and Fugue is a very interesting specimen of the organ works by that famous organist of the Marienkirche at Lübeck.

We append a specification of the organ, which has the misfortune, like so many well-built instruments, of being placed in a building which seems to be lacking in resonance.

MR. CHARLES FRY'S RECITALS.

A sixth series of recitals in costume was commenced by Mr. Charles Fry with Miss Olive Kennett and company, on the 7th ult., at St. George's Hall. As on previous occasions, the music formed a meritorious feature of the performances, for such they may be fitly termed, as, save for scenery, the plays are presented as at a theatre. The co-operation of the orchestra and chorus of the London Organ School, under the direction of Dr. Yorke Trotter, has secured excellent results. On the 7th ult., when the play chosen was "Macbeth," Mr. Clement Locknane's incidental music for chorus and orchestra was rendered in a manner that considerably increased the pleasurableness of the interpretation; and on the 14th ult. equal justice was done to Sir Arthur Sullivan's music to "The Merchant of Venice," the serenade in particular being beautifully sung by Mr. H. Lane Wilson, who personated Lorenzo. Pinsuti's setting in part-song form of "Tell me where is fancy bred" was also admirably rendered by the choir.

The series was concluded on the 21st ult., when "King Henry the Fourth" (Part I.) was presented. The selection of music included "The Ash grove," sung in Welsh by Miss Helen Lynden, who sustained the part of Lady Mortimer; Mozart's Overture to "Der Schauspiel-direktor," Tschaïkowsky's "Chant sans paroles," Professor Villiers Stanford's "Morris Dance," "Saraband," and "Branle," and Lachner's March. With regard to the exponents of the principal characters, nothing but praise is due, and special mention may also be made of Miss Emil Leslie, Mr. Adrian Harley, and Mr. Patrick Munro.

THE BRAHMS MONUMENT AT MEININGEN.

A considerable number of admirers of Johannes Brahms from all parts of Europe were attracted to the music-loving little Saxon capital of Meiningen in order to witness the unveiling, on the 8th ult., of the monument erected to the master, and to assist at the festival performances in connection therewith. The simple and impressive monument has been appropriately placed in the Englische Garten, in picturesque and idyllic surroundings, such as so passionate a lover of nature as Brahms himself was wont to delight in. It is the work of Professor Hildébrand, of Dresden, and consists mainly of a bronze bust of the composer, resting on a massive ornamental base. The inaugural ceremony was preceded by a performance, in the Hauptkirche, of the "Deutsches Requiem," in which the combined forces of the principal choral societies of Saxe-Meiningen and the largely reinforced Meiningen orchestra, under Herr Fritz Steinbach's direction, took part. After this excellent performance, the executants and visitors, forming an imposing procession, repaired to the Englische Garten, where Herr Nachbaur, of the Court Theatre, recited a prologue written by Brahms's intimate friend, Herr Widmann, and Professor Joachim delivered an oration in which eloquent reference was made to the leading phases in the career of the great musician whose memory was being honoured. The monument was then uncovered by the burgomaster. Laurel wreaths and floral tributes were deposited by the Duke and Duchess of Saxe-Meiningen, by a deputation from the Viennese Gesellschaft der Musikfreunde, and others, the proceedings terminating with a fine performance, again in the church, of the "Triumphlied."

REVIEWS.

[Novello and Company, Limited.]

Christmas is an old institution, but it requires novelties for its due celebration, and Messrs. Novello have this year made excellent provision for this requirement in several recently published additions to their series of Octavo Anthems.

"When Christ was born to earth" (No. 606) has for its text lines by Whittier and music by H. Walford Davies. It is opened by a solo for a soprano of recitative character, which is followed by a short interlude for the organ. After this the choir enters with a chorus which forms the bulk of the anthem and possesses considerable interest. The music is decidedly strong, and has a masculine character that usually distinguishes this composer's writings. The organ accompaniment is full and possesses artistic independence, and a commendable feature is the addition of a stave for the pedal part. The work demands a well trained choir and intelligent singing, but its requirements are not excessive and rehearsal will be well repaid.

Mr. Frederic H. Cowen has set J. Montgomery's hymn "Angels from the realms of glory" (No. 611) on familiar lines. It opens with a jubilant chorus in four parts, which is followed by a melodious section for soprano solo or sopranos in unison. At its conclusion the choir, after an introductory passage for a bass soloist, again enters with a vigorous theme which is treated contrapuntally. For the Coda a return is made to the opening chorus.

"Now is come salvation" (No. 612) is composed by Cuthbert Harris, and is more simple in character than the preceding anthem. It contains two solos, respectively for a bass and a soprano, and the choruses in four parts are in solid harmony. The music is very bright and of a kind that is easily learnt.

"In every place incense shall be offered up," by Mr. John E. West (No. 619), is specially suitable for the Epiphany season, but is also appropriate for general use. The time indication is Andante maestoso and the music possesses a suave grace that makes it peculiarly attractive. Passages in solid harmony are effectively contrasted by points of imitation, which, however will not give trouble to a fairly trained choir. The anthem is an excellent example of its class.

"Sing a Song of Praise" (No. 630), by Oliver King, is suitable to choirs of limited resources. It is for four-part chorus throughout and is very easy to read and sing. Delivered with precision it would be stirring and impressive.

"How lovely are Thy habitations" (No. 647), composed by Charles Salaman, begins with a short tenor solo of melodious character, which is followed by a duet for first and second sopranos. A passage for a bass soloist leads into a portion that would form an effective quartet, and the full choir enters on a return being made to the melody of the opening bars. The conclusion is very impressive.

"Christians, awake, salute the happy morn" (No. 648), is described as a Pastoral Anthem for Christmas, and is a setting by Mr. H. M. Higgs of the well-known lines from "Hymns Ancient and Modern." As may be imagined, the music is vigorous and straightforward in expression. It is chiefly in four vocal parts and in solid harmony; but variety is secured by certain lines being given to one section only of the choir, and by the portion beginning "The praises of redeeming love" being set for a quartet or semi-chorus. The anthem will present no difficulties to a choir of ordinary abilities.

"The Word is made incarnate" (No. 649) is a Carol-Anthem for Christmastide, the words written by the Rev. J. M. Neale, D.D., and the music composed by Thomas Adams. This is opened by the sopranos in unison, who are answered by the tenors and basses also in unison. The full choir enters piano at the words "And peace on earth to men," in response to the call of the sopranos, forte, "To God on high be glory," the effect being admirable. Similar treatment to the foregoing is pursued until the close of what is an exceptionally bright and suggestive anthem. An average choir could sing it at sight.

This learned and admirably expressed dissertation is the seventh Robert Boyle lecture delivered before the Oxford Junior Scientific Club on June 6. Although Dr. McKendrick, who is Professor of Physiology in the University of Glasgow, naturally treats his subject from the scientific and anatomical points of view, his essay is one that may be read with profit and not a little instruction by thoughtful musical people. One sentence is of such general interest that it may be quoted: "Auditory impressions, especially those of music, pass to the very roots of our being. There is probably no nerve (i.e., the auditory nerve) that has so many connexions with different parts of the brain."

[Oxford: Clarendon Press.]

The sub-title of this interesting pamphlet is "a chapter in the developmental history of stringed instruments of music." Mr. Balfour, by virtue of his office as curator of the Pitt-Rivers Museum, in the University of Oxford, has unusual facilities for the study of the subject upon which he so learnedly and exhaustively writes. The scope of the book may best be stated in the author's own words:—

"Several years ago General Pitt-Rivers (then Colonel Lane Fox) introduced into the collection of musical instruments, which formed part of his magnificent ethnographical collection, a small series of instruments from Africa, to illustrate, by means of modern survivals of early types, some of the principal stages between the more simple and primitive instruments allied to the bow of the hunter, and the more specialized harp-like instruments of that continent. This short but concise series, illustrating as it does the principles of classification of ethnographical material originated and adopted by General Pitt-Rivers, has always been one which has attracted the attention of visitors to the collection presented by him to the University of Oxford. I shall have occasion to refer to this interesting series several times in the course of my paper."

Again: "My object, then, in this paper is to bring together, so far as I am able, the available material for, so to speak, a Natural History of the Musical Bow and its derivatives; to give a sketch of its geographical distribution; to describe the principal varieties under which it occurs; and to endeavour to indicate its place in the phylogeny of certain stringed instruments of higher types." This Mr. Balfour has succeeded in doing in the pages of the pamphlet under notice. He writes in a pleasant style that is thoroughly readable and gives much information of a most interesting kind. The treatise has illustrations on nearly every page and is furnished with a coloured map showing the "geographical distribution of the Musical Bow." May we venture to suggest to Mr. Balfour that in the second part of his monograph he should furnish an index to the complete work? It is sadly lacking in this first instalment. In this respect his book is of a little too "primitive" a type.

The Revelation. An Oratorio. The words selected from the Apocalypse and the music composed by George William Torrance. [Novello and Company, Limited.]

DR. TORRANCE is widely known to musicians in both hemispheres, and his oratorio, "The Revelation," in its present form, is a good example of his abilities. From the composer's preface it appears that the work "was composed beneath the Southern Cross—many of the themes having been jotted down during a summer walking tour in the Australian Bush—and it was performed for the first time, under the author's direction, in the Melbourne Town Hall, on June 27, 1882." Since that date the work has been revised and several solo numbers have been added, greatly increasing the musical interest. The old oratorio form has been adhered to, and the music is simple and direct in character and expression. It consequently makes but moderate demands on its executants, and for this reason is well suited for church use and amateur choral societies. The usual soprano, contralto, tenor, and bass soloists are required, for whom recitatives and airs of melodious kind have been written. There are two effective duets, respectively for soprano and tenor, and contralto and bass; several quartets, and a quintet with a double tenor part. The choral writing shows command of contrapuntal devices and the fugal portions display much ingenuity.

Notes on Conductors and Conducting. By T. R. Croger. [Nonconformist Musical Journal Office.]

THIS is a little book of the chatty-hintful species. Mr. Croger does not beat about the bush of technicalities, but says all that he has to say in a straightforward, four-in-a-bar manner. He speaks from observation and experience and draws conclusions that are impregnated with common sense and give evidence of critical acumen. Some of his sentences are quite epigrammatic, as, for instance, on the awful subject (in amateur orchestras) of "tuning"—"Zeal counts for nothing, skill for little more, if the playing is out of tune." Not the least valuable section of this brochure is the coda thereof—the "dont's," or, as Mr. Croger has it, the "do nots" of the book. Here are one or two which must conclude this brief notice of a brightly-written and companionable booklet upon an important subject: "Do not undertake the position of conductor unless you have an abundance of patience." "Do not lose your temper." (Mr. Croger might have added: "Do not lose your place.") "Do not conduct with a rotary beat, as though you were stirring a pudding." This gastronomically-seasoned sentence should be circulated throughout the length and breadth of the land with a view of encouraging the length and breadth of the beat. How few conductors there are, and, alas! how many misconductors!

Harvest Dance. From "The Seasons." By Edward German. Arranged for Pianoforte Solo by the Composer. [Novello and Company, Limited.]

MR. EDWARD GERMAN'S Orchestral Suite, entitled "The Seasons," was the most important novelty of the recent Norwich Festival, and the "Harvest Dance," which forms the second number of the suite, is the most fascinating of the four movements. In the pianoforte version the picturesqueness of the scoring is of course lost, but the attractiveness of the "Dance" lies in the irresistible gaiety of its chief subject. This possesses an exuberant and breezy individuality which is delightful, and very little of its force and charm is missed in the present arrangement. The indications given of the scoring are decidedly helpful to the pianist, and the piece, if brightly and crisply played, would certainly help to dispel "pale melancholy."

Italian self-taught. With phonetic pronunciation. By C. A. Thimm. [E. Marlborough and Co.]

THIS is one of the excellent series of little books so admirably compiled by Mr. Thimm. Its scope may be gathered from the list of contents—vocabularies, elementary grammar, idiomatic phrases and dialogues, travel talk, photography, cycling, and musical terms. This last section makes the book of special interest to musical folk apart from its general usefulness as a handy pocket manual on the Italian language. It is a capital shilling's worth.

The Morning Service in F. Op. 15. By A. Davidson Arnott. [Novello and Company, Limited.]

MR. DAVIDSON ARNOTT is one of our young musicians from whom we expect much, and, as may be anticipated, these settings of the church's morning canticles possess many estimable features. Foremost amongst these is the careful accentuation of the words. In the first line of the Te Deum due stress is laid on the third word, and throughout the objective aspect of the hymn is admirably emphasised. There are short passages for a quartet of soloists, and certain portions are set in unison for one or other parts of the choir, effective contrast and variety being thus provided with the solid four-part choral writing. The organ accompaniment possesses considerable independence, but it is admirably designed to support the voices. The harmonic scheme is broad and bold in conception, and a very effective setting of the last line is secured by the employment of the major triad on the flat sixth of the scale, the root of this chord afterwards becoming the minor ninth of the dominant of F.

The Benedictus opens in the key of D minor, and the composer has permitted himself considerable liberty in his harmonic treatment. At the fifth verse the music glides into six flats, at the eighth the signature becomes that of two sharps; at the tenth, four sharps; at the eleventh, three flats; and half way through the next verse the music returns to the opening key and ultimately finishes in F. Although the tonality is so changeful, the transitions are led up to in a manner that will enable a well trained choir to take up their entrances without hesitation, and the music is instinct with earnest striving to impress the meaning of the words. There is a short bass solo and a portion which might be sung as a quartet, but most of the choral writing is in solid four-part harmony.

The Jubilate is set in a less elaborate manner and the music is bright and direct in expression. Some imitative entrances impart interest to the voice parts, and the central unaccompanied portions provide effective contrast. The treatment of the Gloria is emphatic and brilliant.

Suite Ancienne, No. 4, for the Pianoforte. By Walter Macfarren. [Edwin Ashdown.]

IN these three pieces—Sarabande, Gavotte, and Rigaudon—Mr. Macfarren has happily succeeded in giving to their old dance forms a tinge of modern colour, which by no means detracts from their attractiveness. Where all are good it seems invidious to single out one for special mention; but we fancy that the Gavotte will not be the least appreciated number of this modern "Suite Ancienne."

The Recital Series of Transcriptions for the Organ. By Edwin H. Lemare.

Overture to "Euryanthe." Weber.
Lied and Barcarolle.
In the arbour. } H. Hofmann.
Serenade.
[Novello and Company, Limited.]

THIS new series of organ arrangements speaks for itself. Is not the name of the transcriber a sufficient guarantee of excellence? And it may be assumed that the pieces selected are in his judgment suitable for performance upon the king of instruments. The fine "Euryanthe" Overture, which opens the series, is followed by four short and melodious pieces by Hofmann in the quiet style. Their insertion in organ recital programmes would, we feel sure, be found to be as attractive as they were at Mr. Lemare's own performances at St. Margaret's, Westminster.

To Music. Words by Robert Herrick. Music by Lance Smith.

Come, Spring! Words and music by Ronald Quinton.

Time has wings. Words by Ellis Walton. Music by Mary Augusta Salmond. [Weekes and Company.]

So long as song writers exist there would seem to be no possibility of the poems of Robert Herrick being forgotten. The present setting of "To Music" (to becalm his fever) is melodically in consonance with the period in which the poet lived, and is gratefully written for the voice. The accompaniment is also well devised. The vocal compass is only from the first space on the treble stave to the E above and the majority of the notes lie in the medium register.

"Come, Spring," is an invocation to that period of the year when East winds and showers are wont to prevail, but which has long been idealised by poets as the halcyon time for lovers. Of course the latter view is taken by the composer of this song, which is as bright and blythe as spring should be.

"Time has wings" is a merry little ditty wherein is shown how Love gives wings to Time. Most of us have experienced this, and it is a pleasing subject for a singer, who, in this case, should be a light soprano. The song merits recognition, for it possesses vivacity and is well written.

Eton School Songs. Nos. 7 and 9.

Carmen Scholare (Past and Present). Words by A. C. James. Music by Walter Parratt.

[Novello and Company, Limited.]

Whether sung at Eton or elsewhere these songs will be sure of securing sympathetic listeners amongst those for whom they are designed, for they possess a vigour and lilt that are bound to appeal to youthful minds, and, it may be added, that are calculated to arouse some pleasant memories in those whose school days have long past.

The words of "The old School List" are retrospective and possess some humour with a touch now and again of pathos. The interjectional remarks of the chorus are apposite and add considerably to the "go" and attractiveness of the song.

"Carmen Scholare" also contains many references to past doings, undoings, and misdoings in connection with those who have spent their educational days at the historic school. The form of the song is that of a solo in D minor with a refrain for chorus in the relative tonic major, and the music is of a simple and taking kind.

MUSIC IN BELFAST.

The Philharmonic Society announces the performance of Perosi's "Resurrection of Lazarus" (for the first time in Ireland), Berlioz's "Faust," and Wagner's "Tannhäuser"—thus the choral members will have a busy season in mastering works of such difficulty. Then in the Spring two performances of the Hallé Orchestra are looked forward to with great interest, and Dr. Lawrence Walker announces his chamber concerts as usual. To complete the forecast of the season's music, the Feis Ceoil will be held in Belfast in May or June, 1900, and this will give a great stimulus to musical students in all branches of the art.

Dr. Walker's chamber concerts began on the 12th ult., Herr Schilsky (now a resident in Belfast) being the violinist, and, besides playing Bruch's Concerto in G minor (with pianoforte accompaniment), led Beethoven's Trio (Op. 97) and Brahms's Quartet in A (Op. 26).

A popular concert with a local and wonderfully efficient orchestra was given on the 14th ult. (Dr. Koeller, conductor). Herr Curt Herold, who is a very able pianist of fine technique and much delicacy of touch, played Chopin's Nocturne (Op. 25, No. 1) and Ballade (Op. 23), and Herr Herwarth Korder played Bruch's Violin Concerto in G, with orchestral accompaniment. The orchestra played Gluck's Overture to "Iphigenia in Aulis," Mozart's Symphony in E flat, and March from Mendelssohn's "Athalie." This very sound bill of fare was, as might be expected, rather severe for a popular concert, and probably on that account the audience was not very large. "We must creep before we can walk," and certainly both the execution and appreciation of such music has made great strides in Belfast within the last few years.

MUSIC IN BIRMINGHAM.

The concert season has now fairly commenced and soon we shall be having a busy time. The first to break the long silence was Miss Marguerite Saunders, a young Birmingham vocalist, who gave a concert in the Masonic Hall on September 27. She was very successful, and her artistic colleagues (Miss Muriel Foster and Mr. Horace Lott) were well received. Instrumental numbers were contributed by Messrs. Herbert and Gerald Walenn and Mr. Edgar Hulland. Miss Ellen Cowdell, who acted as accompanist, had several well-written songs of her own in the programme.

On the 2nd ult. Messrs. Harrison's first concert took place in the Town Hall, which was crowded to the doors. Madame Melba, Miss Maud Santley, Mr. Jack Robertson, and Mr. George Ferguson were the vocalists. Miss Cherry Enriquez made a successful first appearance here as pianist and Mr. F. Griffith and M. Jean Gerardy were again welcomed. Mr. Seppilli was the accompanist.

The Festival Choral Society opened its fortieth season on the 19th ult. Mendelssohn's "Elijah" formed the programme. The chorus singing was magnificent from beginning to end, and the voices, thanks to the low pitch, were full and round in the high register. Madame Duma, Miss Marie Hooton, Mr. William Green, and Mr. Watkin Mills were the vocal principals, and all did well. Assistance was given in the concerted numbers by Miss Marguerite Gell, Miss Amy Spence, Mr. S. Roper, Mr. F. Cranmer, and Mr. H. Austin. The part of the Youth was sustained by a young girl, Miss May Heath, whose sweet voice was exactly suited to the music. There was a full orchestra, with Mr. C. W. Perkins at the organ. Dr. Swinnerton Heap conducted.

The musical Matinées of the Royal Society of Artists commenced on the 7th ult. The principal vocalists were Miss Olive Harcourt and Mr. Francis Harford. The Saturday concerts in the Town Hall commenced the same evening, when the Midland Musical Society, under Mr. H. M. Stevenson, performed the first two parts of Handel's "Messiah."

On Michaelmas Day, Cowen's "Song of Thanksgiving" was performed at St. Michael's Church, Handsworth. Mr. Hector presided at the organ and Mr. George Halford conducted.

On the 13th ult. the Town Hall was well filled on the occasion of the annual music demonstration by children of the Board Schools. The chorus numbered 600, drawn from eight schools. Each choir sang separately, and then all sang in combination, Mr. William Dobson conducting. A two-part sight test, which was specially written by Mr. George Oakey, was successfully gone through, and the proceedings gave evidence of the good training the children receive.

The Choral Union, under the direction of Mr. Thomas Facer, gave a performance of Handel's "Samson," on the 21st. The vocal principals were Miss Nellie Wiseman, Miss Nellie Pritchard, Mr. William Molineaux, and Mr. William Bennett. The choruses were creditably performed and there was a good audience.

MUSIC IN BRISTOL AND DISTRICT.

The annual meeting of the Bristol Choral Society was held on the 3rd ult., at the Lecture Theatre, under the presidency of Mr. Douglas Metcalfe. The report of the committee, presented by Mr. W. G. Veale, honorary secretary, stated that the Society now consists of 74 honorary members and 513 singing members. It was decided not to have a London concert this season, but to devote all the energies of the members to preparing for next season, when Colston Hall will be rebuilt. A work which has not yet been performed in England has been put into rehearsal, it being Professor Horatio W. Parker's "Legend of Saint Christopher." Mr. F. H. Cowen's "Ode to the Passions" will also be taken in hand.

There was a large attendance at Redland Park Hall, on the 7th ult., when a miscellaneous concert, under the direction of Mr. D. W. Rootham, was given. The singers were Miss Alice Hill, Miss Gertrude Hember, Miss Sylvia Tippett, Miss Edith Evans, Mr. E. B. Tombs, and Mr. Rootham. Miss Mabel Rootham contributed pianoforte pieces and Mr. Le Duc Bucknall played violoncello solos.

Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise" was given at the Church of St. Thomas, on the 13th ult. The soloists were Miss Eva Hartshorn and Mr. E. T. Morgan. The duet "I waited for the Lord" was sung by Miss Hartshorn and Master Richards. Chorus and band numbered eighty and the performance was highly creditable. Mr. W. A. Lamb was at the organ and Mr. E. H. Luton conducted.

St. John's Church Society, the conductor of which is Mr. A. E. Hill, is going to give, at a special Advent service in December, the new cantata "Blessed are they who watch," by Mr. Hugh Blair, late organist of Worcester Cathedral. In Lent, Mendelssohn's "Hear my Prayer" and Stainer's "Crucifixion" are to be given, and, at a concert in the Spring, Sterndale Bennett's "May Queen."

Two societies for ladies only have recently been formed—one, the Bristol and Clifton Ladies' Musical Society, of which the Dowager Duchess of Beaufort is president and Mr. J. F. Nash, conductor; the other, the Clifton Ladies' Glee Club, with Madame Clara Novello Davies, conductress of the Royal Welsh Ladies' Choir, at the head.

The members of the Bristol Orpheus Glee Society have included in their practices, under Mr. Riseley, three compositions specially written for them, one by Mr. W. H. Cummings and two by Mr. C. Lee Williams.

On the 7th ult. the first of the series of Pump Room concerts, Bath, for 1899-1900, was given before a large audience. Mr. Max Heymann conducted an efficient orchestra. The vocalist, Miss Ethel Beetlestone, who made her début at these concerts, demonstrated that she is the possessor of a pleasing soprano voice, and she was recalled after singing two ballads.

The first of the eighth series of organ recitals was given at Christ Church, Bath, on the 8th ult., by Mr. H. J. Davis, the organist, Mr. W. F. C. Schöttler at intervals rendering violin solos.

The Weston-super-Mare Philharmonic Society, under the direction of Mr. Edward Cook, of Bristol, is rehearsing Spohr's "Fall of Babylon" for the Christmas concert. For the Spring concert the choir is practising Cherubini's Requiem Mass in C minor and Hiller's "Song of Victory."

The promoters of a series of chamber concerts at All Saints' Hall, Clifton, had reason to feel gratified at the success of the first performance, which was given on the 16th ult., as the room was fairly filled. The executants were Mr. Herbert Parsons (pianoforte), Mr. Otto Milani (violin), and Mr. Herbert Walenn (violoncello). Of the two trios played by Hans von Bronsart, one was a novelty for Bristolians, though written many years ago. Schumann's D minor (Op. 63) was the other. In both the audience expressed delight and the artists gave an excellent rendering of the works. Miss Gertrude Drinkwater, the vocalist, sang effectively Grieg's "Reminiscences of Mountain and Fjord" and two songs by Edward German. Additional interest will be imparted to the next two concerts from the circumstance that previous to them Dr. Percy Buck, organist of Bristol Cathedral, will lecture on the compositions to be performed in the Music Room of Clifton College, with musical illustrations in which Mr. R. O. Beachcroft and Mr. F. W. Rootham have promised to assist.

MUSIC IN DUBLIN.

We have to correct a statement in last month's correspondence. Contrary to the information we had received at the time, the Dublin Musical Society is to give a concert in November, Haydn's "Imperial" Mass and Handel's "Acis and Galatea" being the works selected for performance, the latter for the first time for many years in Dublin. The second concert will be "The Messiah," given just before Christmas; and in March, Gounod's "Redemption" will be performed. A Members' concert will be given, without orchestra, in February, when Mendelssohn's "Hear my Prayer" and Stewart's Evening Service in E flat will be given with organ accompaniment. The conductor will be, as heretofore, Dr. Joseph Smith.

Herr Ernst Dohnányi, the Hungarian pianist, gave two recitals in the Antient Concert Rooms, on the 12th and 14th ult. It is difficult to say too much in praise of his admirable performances. At the first, Bach's Organ Prelude and Fugue in G minor (arranged by Liszt), Brahms's Variations on a Theme by Handel, and Beethoven's little played but beautiful Sonata in A flat (Op. 110) were the chief selections. In the last-named Herr Dohnányi displayed the very highest artistic qualities to an exceptional degree and satisfied the most critical Beethoven lover. At the second recital, Mendelssohn's Prelude and Fugue in E minor, Schubert's Sonata in A minor, and a number of pieces by Liszt were the most important selections.

Mrs. Page Thrower, who is better known as the energetic entrepreneuse of the Hallé Orchestra concerts, gave a song-recital, with Mr. Plunket Greene, on the 16th ult. Mr. Greene delighted everyone in all his songs—French, German, and English—the most popular being a selection of five or six Irish folk-songs arranged by Stanford and Wood, with words by Alfred Perceval Graves. Mrs. Thrower was fairly successful in some classical songs. The accompaniments were beautifully played by Miss Greene and Miss Elsner.

MUSIC IN EAST ANGLIA.

The Norwich Orchestral Union is rehearsing Handel's "Semele," and at the performance early in December Dr. A. H. Mann, organist to the University of Cambridge, is expected to preside at the organ.

The Great Yarmouth Musical Society proposes to give Beethoven's "Ruins of Athens" and Anderton's "Wreck of the Hesperus" at its next concert, while the neighbouring borough of Lowestoft will be treated to Schumann's Advent Hymn and Bridge's "Cradle of Christ" by the Musical Union. At Hunstanton and Lynn, both conducted by Mr. A. H. Cross, performances will be given of Mendelssohn's "Athalie" and Elgar's "Banner of St. George." At Lynn, Handel's "Israel in Egypt" will also be given.

The Felixstowe Choral Society is to be congratulated upon its choice of Handel's "Samson," and the "Creation" is to be put into rehearsal by the Diss Choral Society. Our Downham Market friends are ambitious enough to announce Mendelssohn's "Elijah," while the Bungay Choral Society will give a performance of Handel's "Acis and Galatea."

The Ipswich Choral Society, under the conductorship of of Mr. B. H. Burton, has decided upon Coleridge-Taylor's "Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast" and Parry's "Blest Pair of Sirens." This Society will also give Handel's "Messiah" on Good Friday.

Under the auspices of the new rector of Wymondham (the Hon. the Rev. A. Parker) and a strong committee, it has been decided to resuscitate the Wymondham Choral Society, and rehearsals have already begun, conducted by Mr. A. S. Wilde.

The opening of the new organ in Norwich Cathedral had been intended to take place on the 1st inst., but the progress of the work having been slower than was anticipated, the ceremony has been postponed.

MUSIC IN LIVERPOOL AND DISTRICT.

Two Liverpool societies—the Philharmonic and the Orchestral—have, we are glad to record, begun the present season by adopting the normal pitch. At the concert on the 10th ult., in which the Philharmonic Society began its sixty-first annual series, Herr Ernst Dohnányi made his first appearance before an audience in Liverpool. He played in Beethoven's Pianoforte Concerto in G; and his rendering, combining intellectual interpretation with technical brilliance, left a most favourable impression. He afterwards offered an Intermezzo and a Capriccio of his own composition. An interesting feature of the concert was the work of the chorus in Mendelssohn's "Loreley," Miss Blauvelt taking the solo part. Beethoven's C minor Symphony—rather a favourite at these concerts—was a good test of the "form" of the orchestra, in which, since last season, there has been a considerable change of personnel. The standard, however, is maintained. Mr. F. H. Cowen continues his conductorship.

At the Orchestral Society's initial concert, on the 14th ult., Mr. A. E. Rodewald's forces did themselves exceptional credit by a rendering of the often heard "Pathétique" Symphony of Tschäikowsky, which, considering that the combination consists in large part of amateurs, was really admirable. Selections from Massenet's Fourth Suite, including the "Angelus," which was beautifully played; and Dr. Wood's setting of Walt Whitman's poem "Ethiopia saluting the colours," were among the interesting features of a judiciously compiled programme. Mr. Theodore Lawson also began his series of concerts in the small concert-room of the St. George's Hall, on the 3rd ult. This series, like that which has for some years been given by Mr. Ernst Schiever, appeals chiefly to lovers of chamber music. A very interesting Quartet for strings by Smetana was given by Mr. Gompertz and his colleagues.

The extra series of Sunday afternoon concerts at New Brighton Tower, under the direction of Mr. Granville Bantock, have so far proved as successful as those which preceded them. Mr. Bantock has a happy way of choosing works which are both excellent and unfamiliar. At the concert on the 16th ult. he favoured us with Gluck's charming Overture to "Iphigenia in Aulis." In connection with Sunday concerts, it should be mentioned that, under the direction of Mr. W. I. Argent, the Liverpool Sunday Society have decided upon an ambitious programme, including "Israel in Egypt," the "Golden Legend," and Perosi's "Resurrection." The chorus of the Society now numbers some 250 vocalists, and the orchestra of fifty instrumentalists has decided claims to merit. The concerts at St. George's Hall on Sunday afternoons are always crowded.

MUSIC IN MANCHESTER.

With the third week in October our musical season commenced in good earnest and with full vigour. Naturally, around the Hallé Subscription Concerts our expectation chiefly hovered; the excitement being stimulated by the advent of the new conductor of world-wide celebrity, and by expectation of what so experienced a chief might be able to achieve with an orchestra of long-tried excellence. A very large audience assembled on the evening of the 19th ult. to greet Dr. Richter and to give assurance of good-will undimmed by recollection of any past misgivings and preferences. Thus the opening of the forty-second Hallé season was most successful in every way. The programme, which opened with the "Meistersinger" Overture, included no absolute novelty. Familiarity with Beethoven's most popular C minor Symphony, and with many excellent renderings of it, enabled most of the audience quickly to detect any freshness of colouring given to this or that well-known strain without losing grip of the poetic intention of the whole gorgeous tone-picture. And the solemnity of the "Parsifal" themes lost nothing through that intellectual absorption of the faculties which, when listening to an unfamiliar work, often deadens the mind to the emotional influence which it is the highest power of music to excite and deepen. Devotion of a fine orchestra to the kaleidoscopic pictures which a series of formal variations upon a set theme may produce always seems a somewhat extravagant and unworthy submission, however cleverly may be presented the different aspects which the subject may be made to assume; and so the Brahms essays upon the Haydn text, known as St. Antonio's Chorale, like most such elaborations, seem more interesting as examples of scholarly treatment, and as exercises in diversified scoring, than as tending to any loftier purpose. Not infrequently the vocal pieces in a programme suffer through being placed in a setting which dwarfs them, but with such an artist as Madame Blanche Marchesi that would be impossible. Not by absolute and irresistible charm of voice merely—although the variety of modulated tone whereby she conveys almost infinitely shaded delicacies of expression is truly marvellous—in the "Ah! Perfido" of Beethoven and the imaginative "Lorelei" fantasy of Liszt, she exercised a spell over the vast audience which was scarcely broken by the triple recall which rewarded her second effort.

Mr. Brodsky's interesting chamber concerts will be resumed on the 1st inst., and in the meantime it was pleasant to be invited by Mr. Carl Fuchs to one of the friendly gatherings which he directs at the Schiller Club to listen to a programme including Brahms's Sextet (Op 18), Tschaïkowsky's Sextet in D (Op. 70), to Miss Edith Robinson's skilful rendering of some violin solos, and to Antonin Dvorák's "Waldesruhe" Adagio for violoncello.

The first meeting of Dr. Watson's Vocal Society was rendered interesting by a well-chosen selection of glees and part-songs and by the second performance of Coleridge-Taylor's "Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast"; and our local excellent musician, Mr. Max Mayer, provided for his first musical evening an excellent fare, of which the more important numbers were Mozart's Trio, No. 5 (in which he enjoyed the co-operation of Messrs. Brodsky and Fuchs), Brahms's Sonata for pianoforte and violin (Op. 108), and Mendelssohn's Sonata (Op. 45) for pianoforte and violoncello.

MUSIC IN THE NORTH OF SCOTLAND.

The musical season in the North opened with the first of the series of Harrison concerts, which was given in Aberdeen, on the 9th ult. Madame Melba was the principal attraction, and she appeared with her usual success. On the 16th ult. the first of the Aberdeen chamber concerts was given, when a carefully selected programme was presented. Mr. J. M. Nisbet (pianoforte) and Mr. W. M. Hefft (violin) both played well; the former indeed deserving high praise for his performance.

The season promises to be a busy one, the Aberdeen Choral Union having arranged for performances of "Israel in Egypt," "Messiah," and Beethoven's "Choral" Fantasia. The Philharmonic Society has also an attractive programme, and we note that Peterhead is to have a performance of "The Messiah" in January.

MUSIC IN NOTTINGHAM AND DISTRICT.

There are already signs of considerable activity in musical circles by way of preparation for the coming season. At Ashburne, the Choral Society, under Mr. W. H. Tutt, are studying Barnett's "Ancient Mariner." The Derby Choral Union, under Mr. C. Hancock, will perform the "Creation" on the 7th inst., to be followed later by "The Messiah." The Grantham Choral Society are rehearsing Sullivan's "Martyr of Antioch," under Mr. Dickinson. At Heanor, under Mr. W. G. Taylor, a start has been made with the "Creation," and the Society has arranged to include "The Messiah" and "Hymn of Praise" in the season's work. At Retford, the Choral Society's first concert will include Beethoven's "Mount of Olives" and Elgar's "Light of Life," under Mr. Hamilton White's conductorship. The Choral Society at Wirksworth has taken in hand "Judas Maccabæus," under Mr. Carl Ashover. Further news from Derby shows that the Orpheus and Madrigal Society, under Mr. A. F. Smith, is undertaking a performance of Dr. Mee's "Horatius"; and at the Derby Diocesan Training College, Bennett's "Woman of Samaria" and Mozart's First Mass are in preparation.

In the domain of chamber music Nottingham will be well supplied in the current season. Miss Cantelo has arranged for the Cologne Quartet to appear on November 30. On March 1 Mr. Willy Hess is to play, and, on March 22, Dr. Joachim is engaged, supported by Mr. Hobday, Mr. Whitehouse, and Miss Cantelo. Messrs. Thorpe and Ellenberger announce two chamber concerts for the 16th inst. and January 18, with Miss Edwards as vocalist and Madame Fromm and Miss Ellenberger as pianists.

At Derby, Mr. Harold Henry's Orchestral Society are rehearsing German's "As you like it" music, Tschaïkowsky's "Nut-Cracker" Suite, and Délibes's "Kassya" for performance on the 29th inst.

Miss Nellie Smith gave a highly successful pianoforte recital on the 5th ult., when her programme was culled from the classical masters, from Bach to Brahms. A lecture by Dr. Horner, on Mendelssohn, on the 13th ult., with musical illustrations, was well attended.

MUSIC IN SHEFFIELD AND DISTRICT.

The Festival interrupted for a time the ordinary course of musical events in the district, but, now that it is over, this month will see a plethora of concerts.

The Burngreave Choral Society performed Nichol's "Holy Grail," on the 16th ult., under Mr. H. Chisholm Jackson. Mr. G. F. Cawthorne was organist.

Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise" was performed in St. Mary's Church, on the 23rd ult., under Mr. J. A. Rodgers. The choir of the church was largely augmented for the occasion. The soloists were Mr. R. Thompson and Masters Eddie Lowe and E. Unwin.

The Musical Union, under Dr. H. Coward, announces Mendelssohn's "Elijah" for December 5.

MUSIC IN YORKSHIRE.

Up to the time of writing one is obliged to speak of music in Yorkshire almost entirely in the future tense. The Huddersfield Subscription Concerts, which opened a long series on September 26, form the chief exception, but, after all, ballad concerts, even when they include so brilliant a star as Madame Melba, who appeared on the 17th ult., cannot be said to have any abiding interest. A concert of the Huddersfield Glee and Madrigal Society, on the 10th ult., certainly deserves honourable mention, for the singing of delightful old madrigals by Fesca and Wilbye, as well as of more modern productions of less worth, under Mr. J. E. Ibeson's direction, was of a high degree of excellence. The "Vätergruft" of Cornelius, in which Mr. John Browning sang the solo, was also a noteworthy feature of the programme. Yet another Huddersfield Society is well up to time in beginning work. The Choral Society, which on the 20th ult. gave Mr. Cowen's "The Passions," followed by Sir Arthur Sullivan's sacred musical drama "The Martyr of Antioch." So far as concerned the chorus, a fine performance was given of the latter work, but the band was hardly equal to its task. The soloists, Madame Ella Russell, Miss Edna Thornton, Mr. Lloyd Chandos, and Mr. Bantock Pierpoint, were all thoroughly efficient. Mr. John Bowling conducted.

The Bradford Permanent Orchestra opened their season on the 21st ult. They have, with wisdom and enterprise, engaged Mr. Cowen as their conductor, and, under his direction, they gave a performance of Beethoven's Fifth Symphony which showed that his instruction has already produced good fruit. Madame Ruth Lamb was the vocalist and the Bradford Festival Choral Society took part in the concert. On the 17th ult. the Bradford Old Choral Society gave a creditable performance of Benedict's "St. Peter." Miss Florence Lancaster, Miss Mabel Pickard, Mr. Gwilym Richards, and Mr. W. Thornton were the principals, and Mr. Hartwell Robertshaw conducted.

As regards coming events, the Leeds Philharmonic and Subscription Concerts must be allowed to take the first place in Yorkshire for the sustained interest of their programmes. For the series of six concerts the Hallé Orchestra has been engaged on five occasions, while on the fifth Dr. Joachim will appear with a quartet party. Two of the concerts will be chiefly orchestral, and for their excellence Dr. Richter's name will be a sufficient guarantee. The supremacy of the programmes as a whole lies, however, in the extraordinary interest of the choral works selected, and here one cannot but recognise the influence of Dr. Stanford, the conductor of the Philharmonic Society's chorus. In addition to the invariable "Messiah" performance at Christmastide, we are to have a classic as important as Beethoven's Mass in D. The "Infancy of Christ," of Berlioz, which has never yet been heard in Leeds, will be given; Brahms will be represented by two of his loveliest choral works, the "Nœnia" and "Song of Destiny," and Mendelssohn by a Psalm. Contemporary music will not be forgotten: witness the inclusion of Mr. Coleridge-Taylor's "Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast," and of a chorus by Dr. Stanford, "Our enemies have fallen"—which it is to be hoped may have a special significance when given at the closing concert in March.

The Leeds Choral Union will serve a distinct purpose in appealing to more conservative tastes. Its opening concert will, it is true, be concerned with a sufficiently "advanced" work in Mr. Elgar's "Caractacus," a very welcome echo of the last Leeds Festival; but it will be coupled with a well-established favourite in the "Walpurgis Night," just as, later on in the season, the "Stabat Mater" of Dvorák will have as a foil the "Stabat Mater" of Rossini, a somewhat curious combination. To the Society's annual "Messiah" performance a special interest will be given by following the lead of the Royal Albert Hall Society and giving the oratorio, so far as is practicable, as Handel wrote it. "Elijah" completes the scheme.

The thirty-fifth season of the Bradford Subscription Concerts will, as usual, include one chamber concert—at which Mr. Brodsky's highly artistic quartet party will appear—and one miscellaneous programme. For the two choral concerts the Hallé band has been engaged, but Mr. Cowen will conduct the works chosen, which are Coleridge-Taylor's "Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast"—an interesting proof of the impression made by the cantata, since it was given at these concerts only last season—the "Golden Legend," "Hymn of Praise," and Rossini's "Stabat Mater," the last two being chosen as the medium of Mr. Edward Lloyd's farewell to Bradford. Mr. Dohnányi's performance of his Pianoforte Concerto at one of the two orchestral concerts, to be conducted by Dr. Richter, and Madame Brema's singing of the closing scene from the "Götterdämmerung" are the most striking features of the orchestral programmes, so far as they are at present arranged.

The usually enterprising Halifax Choral Society, established as far back as the year 1818, is this season inclined to find in discretion the better part of valour, in the selection of "Judas Maccabæus," "The Messiah," the "Walpurgis Night," and Dvorák's ever welcome "Spectre's Bride." An excellent series of Subscription Concerts is, however, being planned for Halifax, so that the town will have a more ample allowance of good music than is customary.

The Dewsbury Choral Society has, contrary to usual experience in the West Riding, found that "The Messiah" will not pay, a fact from which it may be inferred, according to pleasure, that Dewsbury is either very much behind the times or very much in advance of them. The chief works they intend to give during the coming season are "Elijah" and Goring Thomas's "Swan and Skylark."

A good programme has been prepared for the winter by the Middlesbrough Musical Union, one of the most enlightened of Northern societies. It purposes giving an accepted classic in "Messiah," a popular work of the romantic school in the "Faust" of Berlioz, and a rarely heard classic in the "König Thamos" music of Mozart. Dr. Richter will conduct a programme that will include the closing scene of "Parsifal," Act I., and Beethoven's C minor Symphony, while Dr. Joachim will, at another concert, play the Beethoven Violin Concerto. Middlesbrough, in common with not a few towns in the North of England, owes much to Mr. Kilburn, who, as honorary conductor of the Musical Union, has brought it to its present state of artistic importance.

Among the more miscellaneous concerts of the West Riding, the Messrs. Haddock's Musical Evenings at Leeds and Harrogate, the Harrison Concerts at Bradford, and the Huddersfield Subscription Concerts take a foremost place. The Messrs. Haddock have, at Leeds, established an orchestra of local players, whose concerts are to be given in aid of local charities.

MUSIC IN WALES.

The list of subjects for next year's National Eisteddfod, which is to be held at Liverpool, has been published. Taken as a whole, the musical portion of the programme is disappointing and hardly compares favourably with recent National Eisteddfod lists. A moderate prize is offered for the performance of the Overture to "Athalie" by an orchestral band, and four guineas for some portions of a Haydn string quartet—exactly one guinea above what is offered for the playing of "Jenny Jones" on the cornet! The two first-named pieces represent all the concerted instrumental music, and it can scarcely be contended that this is putting the Eisteddfodic clock on. Sight-singing also is entirely neglected.

The short music course initiated at the University College of Wales, Aberystwyth, this year, under the direction of Mr. David Jenkins, the Lecturer in Music, has been so successful that it has been decided to continue the course next year and to extend the subjects for study. It is to be hoped the other constituent colleges of the Welsh University may be induced to follow in the same direction.

A number of harvest festivals have been held throughout the Principality. At a few churches efforts have been made to perform cantatas, and in some instances with orchestral accompaniment; but it is necessary to emphasize the elementary fact that a complete stringed quartet is more to be desired in every way than a "full band" of an odd assortment of various instruments, but boasting of only one second violin, no viola, and no violoncello, as was recently the case at one of these festivals. If Wales is to make any real progress in instrumental music it must proceed on proper artistic lines.

On the 9th ult. the North Wales Tonic Sol-fa Association held its annual meeting at Carnarvon, when a paper by Mr. L. J. Roberts (H.M. Inspector of Schools), on "The preparation necessary to be a successful teacher of music," was read at the morning conference.

Mr. David Jenkins read a paper on "Music—its origin, its connection with the sister arts, the Christian Church, and the state of the art in Wales," at the first meeting of the thirteenth session of the Manchester Welsh National Society, on the 14th ult.

The Aberystwyth Choral Society, under the conductorship of Mr. David Jenkins, announces a performance of Mendelssohn's "Walpurgis Night" and Rossini's "Stabat Mater" during the coming season.

The annual prize distribution to successful students at Trinity College took place at St. George's Hall on the 24th ult., the presentation being made by Mr. W. Ambrose, Q.C.; Dr. E. H. Turpin, the Warden, presiding. The report of the examinations was read by Mr. Sebastian Hoare (local secretary). The number of prizes awarded was twenty-seven, which included three silver medals, five bronze medals, and nineteen book prizes. Mr. W. Ambrose, in moving the adoption of the report, gave a brief address, in which he congratulated the prize-winners on their successes, which had been won in fair examinations. The value of the prizes was not only in their money worth, but in the indication they afforded that the possessor had gone through a certain course of study, at the same time giving joy and pleasure. There was no pleasure higher than that which was the result of success. The benefits clung to them through life, and whether they had studied the subject as their leisure or business, they would look back on that time with real pleasure. The report was adopted, and the prizes, which included the National Prize, awarded for the best work throughout the United Kingdom, were handed to the winners. The National Prize was taken by Mr. W. E. Agate, the Local Exhibition by Miss Nellie Munro, the Silver Medals by Miss Raby (pianoforte), Miss Peile (violin), and Mr. Agate (harmony and counterpoint).

Mr. Arthur Foxton Ferguson gave an evening concert at Steinway Hall, on the 21st ult., at which five interesting songs from "England's Helicon," for four voices with pianoforte accompaniment, by Dr. Ernest Walker, were performed. The vocalists were Miss Fillunger, Miss Florence Shaw, Mr. Walter Ford, and Mr. Ferguson, while the composer presided at the pianoforte. Mr. Ferguson, who was in excellent voice, contributed songs by Schubert, Dr. Basil Harwood, and two Hungarian folk-songs arranged by Mr. F. Korbay. Miss Fillunger, Miss Muriel Foster, and Mr. Walter Ford also sang several songs with much acceptance; while Miss May Campbell-Taylor played a violoncello sonata by Locatelli and Dr. Ernest Walker played a pianoforte solo of his own composition, entitled "Variations on a Norwegian air."

At the Downs Chapel, Clapton, on the 14th ult., the organ was re-opened, after being enlarged and re-built by Messrs. Peter Conacher and Co. Smart's Te Deum in F was sung at the dedication service, and Miss A. C. Smith, a member of the choir, sang a setting of the hymn "O Jesus, I have promised," specially composed for the occasion by Mr. Webb. The choir contributed Goss's anthem "The glory of the Lord," and the "Gloria," Mozart. A recital was given by the organist and choirmaster, Mr. W. C. Webb, when his programme comprised works by Handel, Rea, Guilmant, and Smart; and Miss E. L. C. Head played Handel's Largo as a violin solo.

The Bromley Musical Society has issued an interesting prospectus for its twentieth season's operations. The choral works to be performed are Parry's "Blest Pair of Sirens," Sullivan's "Martyr of Antioch," and Elgar's "The Banner of St. George." The orchestral selections include Mendelssohn's "Scotch" and Haydn's "Military" Symphonies, the "Coriolanus," "Fingal's Cave," and "Water Carrier" (Cherubini) Overtures, and Mr. Percy Pitt's "Air de Ballet" for strings. Mr. F. Lewis Thomas will occupy his accustomed place as conductor.

Mrs. Campbell Forsyth gave a farewell concert at Steinway Hall, on the 10th ult., assisted by Mdlle. Irene Szilassy and Mr. Joseph Ripley, Miss Elsie M. Southgate (violin), and others. Señor and Madame Sobrino gave a pianoforte and vocal recital at the same hall on the 11th ult. The second season of the Kruse Quartet concerts was commenced, on the 19th ult., at the Hampstead Conservatoire.

Miss Cecilia Gates has arranged for a series of three chamber concerts to be held in the New Music Court, Crystal Palace, on Mondays, at 8.30 p.m., beginning on the 27th inst. The programmes, which have been admirably selected, include a new pianoforte quartet by Dr. Ernest Walker, and amongst the artists engaged appears the name of Miss Fanny Davies.

The fairy opera, "Snow-white," by the Countess Marie Mely (produced at St. George's Hall in the Spring), was given at the Crystal Palace on the 24th ult., the principal parts being taken by Miss Constance Leslie, Miss Mona Macquoid, Miss Grainger Kerr, and Mdlle. Jeanne Douste. Mr. August Manns conducted.

The fourteenth season of the Streatham Choral Society commences on December 18, with Handel's "Samson." There will be a miscellaneous programme on February 26, and on May 7 Mendelssohn's "St. Paul" will be given. Mr. Stewart Macpherson will be the conductor, as usual.

Mr. J. T. Hutchinson gave his annual vocal recital at Steinway Hall, on the 19th ult., when he sang very artistically. He was assisted by several of his pupils, a select choir, and Mr. Harvey Löhr (pianist).

The Civil Service Vocal Union has commenced its nineteenth season. Mr. J. H. Maunder acts as honorary conductor.

Mr. P. A. Whitehead, assistant-organist of Chichester Cathedral and organist of St. Bartholomew's Church, Southsea, has been appointed conductor of Pulborough and Petworth Choral Society.

The Ilford Philharmonic Society has placed in rehearsal Schubert's "Song of Miriam." The conductor is Mr. A. H. Allen, organist and choirmaster of St. Clement's Church.

Mr. S. Seymour Smith has been appointed conductor of the Brockley Choral and Orchestral Society.

FOREIGN NOTES.

Berlin.—The new season of the Philharmonic concerts commenced on the 9th ult., under Herr Nikisch's direction, and included the first performance in Berlin of the Symphony in D minor by César Franck, which, though difficult to appreciate at a first hearing, excited much interest. Madame Carreño was the pianist and was greatly applauded in Tschaïkowsky's Concerto in B flat major.——Herr Sucher, the veteran conductor of the Royal Opera, has retired from his post which he has held with such distinction for so many years.——Amongst the series of lectures to be given during the winter at the Klindworth-Scharwenka Conservatorium are those of Dr. Goldschmidt, on "The Forms of Classical Instrumental Music," and of Herr Otto Lessmann, on the "History of Pianoforte Literature in the Nineteenth Century."

Bremen.—An interesting performance of ancient Greek music took place here in connection with the recent meeting of Philologians, when, under the direction of Dr. Thierfelder, several of the resuscitated specimens of a practically lost art obtained a hearing. Among those most appreciated were the "Hymn to Apollo," discovered some years since at Delphi, and a fragment appertaining to the "Orestes," of Euripides, and forming part of the Archduke Rainer collection of papyri, preserved in the Viennese Imperial Library. These pieces were sung first by a single voice and then repeated by a chorus; a harp entering with an occasional chord.

Carlsruhe.—The annual special performances at the Court Theatre—which included, in addition to the usual Wagnerian representations, works by Mozart, Beethoven, and Berlioz—culminated, on the 8th ult., in a magnificent performance of "Die Meistersinger," under Herr Mottl's direction.——The first production of the new opera by Max Schillings, "Der Pfeifertag," which may be expected early this month, is being looked forward to with intense interest.

Christiania.—The inauguration performances at the newly erected National Theatre included Björnsen's drama "Sigurd Jorsalfer," with important musical numbers by Edvard Grieg, when both dramatist and composer were the objects of most enthusiastic demonstrations on the part of the audience.

Como.—Don Lorenzo Perosi's new oratorio, "Il Natale del Redentore" ("The Birth of the Saviour"), was produced, for the first time, on September 22, at the Cathedral, under the direction of the prolific young composer. There was an orchestra of 130 executants and a choir of some 230 voices, the latter being mainly supplied by opera choristers! The oratorio is divided into two parts, and amongst the numbers more particularly appreciated were a hymn in praise of the Virgin Mary, a Magnificat for soli, chorus, and orchestra, and some descriptive orchestral numbers. The reception of the work, on the whole, was, however, not an enthusiastic one.

Dresden.—Herr Johannes Smith, an excellent violoncellist, has been appointed to a professorship at the Royal Conservatorium. The artist will be associated with the pianist, Mr. Sherwood, and the violinist, Herr Kretina, in a series of chamber concerts to be given during the coming season.

Frankfort-on-Main.—The first performance in Germany of Mascagni's new opera, "Iris," took place on September 26, at the Stadt-Theater, with complete success. There were numerous recalls of the principal interpreters, amongst whom Fräulein Schacks, in the titular part, was specially admired, while the performance generally, under Herr Wolfram's direction, was an excellent one.

Graz.—A magnificent new theatre, seating some 1,700 spectators, and excellent in its acoustic properties, was inaugurated last month with a performance of "Lohengrin."

Hamburg.—The first performance took place last month, at the Stadt-Theater, of August Bungert's "Circé," a music-drama appertaining to the cycle "Homeric World," for the complete performance of which a special theatre is to be erected at Godesberg, near the Rhine. The production of "Circé" was a success from a scenic and spectacular point of view, while as regards the merits of the music opinions are greatly divided.

Königsberg.—A prize of 10,000 marks has been offered by Dr. Walter Simon, an enthusiastic music-lover, for the composition of a German "Volksoper," or popular opera of an elevating order.

Leipzig.—Felix Weingartner's opera "Genesius" was produced for the first time at the Stadt-Theater, on the 2nd ult., when it met with a highly favourable reception. The composer himself conducted, and at the conclusion of the performance received a perfect ovation on the part of a numerous audience.——The society recently formed by members of the Gewandhaus Orchestra, for the performance of rarely-heard compositions for wind instruments only, is announcing a series of interesting concerts during the present season.——At a recently held general meeting of German musical directors, a Society, adopting the title of "Deutscher Musik-directoren Verband," was formed, having its centre in Leipzig, and numbering already over 230 members.——The Riedel-Verein announces the performance, this month, of Handel's "Israel in Egypt," in Dr. Chrysander's version, and the production, later on, of an important new work by Enrico Bossi—viz., a setting of the "Song of Solomon."

Louvain.—In connection with the ceremony of unveiling a statue erected to Remy, on the 8th ult., a cantata, written for the occasion by M. Léon du Bois, the director of the Academie de Musique, was performed by some 700 executants, and produced a most marked impression, being a work of genuine inspiration and excellent musicianship.

Madrid.—Herr Zumpe, the excellent conductor of the Schwerin Opera, has been engaged to conduct a series of performances at the Royal Opera, including the first production of Wagner's "Siegfried," for which a Spanish version of the book has been prepared.

Milan.—The Teatro Lirico, which re-opened its doors on the 14th ult., puts forward an ambitious programme for the season, including, amongst a number of important works to be newly mounted, Mascagni's new opera, "Le Maschere," Massenet's "Cendrillon," Bruneau's "L'Attaque du Moulin," and Berlioz's "La Prise de Troie."——A project is on foot for reconstructing and converting into a concert hall the ancient Chiesa della Pace, for the performance exclusively of sacred music, and more particularly of the oratorios of Don Lorenzo Perosi.

Munich.—Under the patronage of the Prince Regent, a new theatre is to be constructed, after the Bayreuth model, with lowered orchestra, &c., in this capital, in which Wagnerian and other performances are to be given at popular prices. In connection with the recent Goethe celebrations, a very fine performance of "Egmont" was given at the Royal Theatre, with Beethoven's music, conducted by Herr Stavenhagen. A numerously attended congress of guitarists and mandolinists was held here last month, and some interesting concert performances were given in connection therewith. It was decided to establish a representative society, with branches in Germany and Austria, Herr Hammerer, of Augsburg, being elected president. The regular concert season was inaugurated last month with two performances of the Kaim Orchestra, conducted by Herr Richard Strauss, in which the symphonic poems, "Don Juan," "Don Quixote," and "Heldenleben," and a number of vocal compositions, with orchestra, by Herr Strauss, were included.

New York.—The well-known German male choir "Arion," of New York, has just returned from an extensive concert tour, in the course of which it visited nearly all the principal cities of North America. Its reception everywhere was a most brilliant one, and in San Francisco and St. Louis, in particular, the performances of the excellently trained choir aroused the utmost enthusiasm.——Herr Emil Paur, conductor of the German Opera, has been appointed director of the National Conservatorium, a position formerly occupied by Antonin Dvorák.

Paris.—Leoncavallo's "La Bohème" was brought out, for the first time in Paris, at the Théâtre Lyrique de la Renaissance, on the 10th ult., the French version of the libretto having been furnished by M. Eugène Crosti. The performance was a decided success, Mdlles. Thévenet, Franday, and Richard; MM. Leprestre, Soulacroix, Ghasne Bourgeois, Théry, Barré, and Boursier forming a truly excellent ensemble.

Prague.—The first performance of the two-act music-drama "Der arme Heinrich," by Hans Pfitzner, took place, on September 23, at the German Theatre, with very considerable success. The composer, who conducted, is a professor at the Stern'sche Conservatorium in Berlin, where the new work has likewise been accepted for performance at the Royal Theatre.

Rouen.—Wagner's "Siegfried" is shortly to be produced under the active management of the Théâtre des Arts. This will be the first performance of that part of the "Nibelungen" tetralogy in France.

St. Petersburg.—Much satisfaction is being expressed in social and artistic circles at the appointment of Prince S. Wolkowsky to the directorship of the Imperial theatres. The Prince, who is said to be a highly cultured artist, was on terms of intimate friendship with Anton Rubinstein and Tschaïkowsky.

Stettin.—Under the style of "Riemann Conservatorium," a new music-teaching institution was opened last month, under the direction of Herr Barthold Knetsch. As its name implies, it is to be conducted on the system and reformatory principles advocated by the distinguished Leipzig professor. It already has over fifty pupils.

Venice.—M. Jules Bas, a French musician residing in Italy, has been appointed the successor of Don Lorenzo Perosi in the musical directorship of St. Mark's Church.

Vienna.—A concert, commemorative of the fiftieth anniversary of the death of Frederick Chopin, was given on the 13th ult., somewhat in anticipation of the actual date, by the Tonkünstler Verein, before a very numerous audience. The programme consisted of some of the less frequently heard works of the Polish master—viz., the pianoforte trio (Op. 8), the violoncello sonata, and a number of characteristic Lieder, the latter superbly rendered by Fräulein Lola Beeth. Herr Richard Heuberger, the vice-president, opened the proceedings with an interesting address. Chopin visited Vienna in 1829 and also in the following year, and his compositions were greatly appreciated from the first. ——The threatened crisis in the conductorship of the Philharmonic Society has been fortunately averted by Herr Mahler's finally consenting to remain at the post. Herr Luze, hitherto director of the chorus, has been appointed second Capellmeister at the Imperial Opera.—A performance in memory of the late Johann Strauss was announced to be given by the Gesellschaft der Musikfreunde on the 25th ult., when, amongst other pieces, Brahms's "Deutsches Requiem" was to be performed.——The mortal remains of the Walzerkönig were removed, on the 8th ult., to their final resting-place at the Central Cemetery, where they are placed by the side of those of Brahms. The ceremony was of quite an unceremonious kind.——Herr Richard von Perger, the well-known conductor of the Gesellschaft der Musikfreunde, has been appointed director of the Imperial Conservatorium in the room of the late Johann Fuchs, and it is doubtful whether he will be able to retain the conductorship of the Gesellschaft der Musikfreunde.——By order of the Town Council a commemorative tablet is to be placed on the house, in the Karlgasse, where Johannes Brahms resided and in which he died, on April 3, 1897.

Warsaw.—An influential and representative committee has been formed with the intention of forming a Concert Institution after the pattern of the Leipzig Gewandhaus. Among those who have already subscribed considerable sums towards this scheme are the brothers De Reszke and M. Paderewski, and there is every prospect of its speedy realisation.

The Cambridge University Musical Society announces a performance of Mendelssohn's "St. Paul," with a London orchestra, on the 29th inst.

OBITUARY.

Signor Foli.

The death of the distinguished vocalist known as Signor Foli took place, after a short illness, at Southport, on the 20th ult. Signor Foli, whose real name was Allan James Foley, and who was born at Cahir, Tipperary, on August 7, 1837, was originally a carpenter. But finding that he had a voice he studied singing under Bisaccia, at Naples, and the young basso made his first appearance at Catania, in 1862. After hearing him in opera at Paris, Mr. Mapleson engaged him for Her Majesty's Theatre, where he made his English début as St. Bris in Meyerbeer's "Huguenots," on June 17, 1865. Success attended him, not only in London, but in the Provinces and in the United States, and he sang bass parts in over sixty operas. His favourite part was Moses in Rossini's "Moses in Egypt." One of his earliest appearances as an oratorio singer was in "Israel in Egypt," at the old St. Martin's Hall, on April 25, 1866, being a performance given by the National Choral Society under the late G. W. Martin, when he sang "The Lord is a Man of war" with Mr. Santley as a colleague. "Drinkwater Hard" (Mr. J. W. Davison), in a notice of that performance in the Musical World, said that they "were vociferously encored (as was inevitable) in the obstreperous (!) duet 'The Lord is a Man of war.'" His first appearance at the Handel Festival was in 1868, and his first Festival was at Norwich, in 1869. He took part in the first performance of Gounod's "Redemption" and numerous other oratorios, and he was the Daland at the first English performance of Wagner's "Flying Dutchman" at Drury Lane, July 30, 1870. As a ballad singer, Signor Foli was widely known, and his fine voice and striking presence will be much missed from the concert-room.

We regret to record the death of Mary, the wife of Mr. Robert Newman, which took place at 2, Mandeville Place, on the 6th ult., at the age of thirty-one. Much sympathy goes out to the manager of the Queen's Hall in the loss of one who was to him a true help-meet and a wise counsellor.

On September 29 George Cooper, organist of Christ Church, Newgate Street (also of the Birkbeck Institute and the City of London College), son of the late George Cooper, orgainst of the Chapel Royal, St. James's, &c., aged thirty-nine.

The death is announced, on the 5th ult., at Vienna, of Johann Nepomuk Fuchs, the director of the Conservatorium, and colleague of Dr. Richter in the conductorship of the Imperial Opera. He was born in 1841, at Frauenthal (Styria), where his father, Patritz Fuchs, was a schoolmaster, renowned for his masterly organ playing; and having studied music both there and at the Augustineum, in Graz, he occupied the post of Capellmeister at different theatres in Austria-Hungary, and also at Cologne in 1873 and Hamburg in 1875. From the latter place he was called, in a similar capacity, to the Viennese Opera in 1879, a position which he held, with much distinction, until his premature death, from blood-poisoning. He was appointed to a professorship of composition at the Conservatorium in 1888, and on the resignation of Hellmesberger in 1893 succeeded to the post of director of that famous Institution. Fuchs was the composer of an opera, "Zingara," and of a number of songs, and in his excellent editions of operas by Handel and Gluck, and more particularly of the complete works of Franz Schubert, issued by Messrs. Breitkopf and Härtel, he has left an enduring monument of his critical ability and thorough musicianship.

The chief of French organ builders, and one of the most distinguished representatives of his art the world over, M. Cavaillé-Coll, died in Paris, on the 13th ult., at the venerable age of eighty-eight. The son and pupil of an organ builder at Toulouse, he came to the French capital at the age of twenty-two and at once made his mark by successfully entering the competition, opened at the time, for the reconstruction of the organ at Saint-Denise, carrying out the work in such a way as to leave no doubt concerning his eminent qualifications. M. Cavaillé-Coll built the organs in Manchester Town Hall and in the Albert Hall, Sheffield.

BRIEF SUMMARY OF COUNTRY AND COLONIAL NEWS.

We do not hold ourselves responsible for any opinions expressed in this summary, as all the notices are either collated from the local papers or supplied to us by correspondents.

Ainderby-Steeple.—A Harvest Thanksgiving Service was held in the Parish Church on September 29, and repeated on the following Sunday evening. The chief feature of the service, which was fully choral, was a new anthem, "Fear not, O land," composed by Mr. T. B. Wentworth, organist and choirmaster of the church, who is also the conductor of the choral society. The anthem, which is very bright and effective, was much appreciated by the congregation, and the soprano solo, "Thou crownest the year," was tastefully rendered by Mrs. Wentworth.

Bath.—On the 12th ult. two classical concerts were given in the Pump Room. Miss Dorothy Maggs, who is a pupil of Mr. Francesco Berger, made her first appearance at these concerts, when she played the solo part of Schumann's Pianoforte Concerto with orchestral accompaniment and a Polonaise in E flat by Moszkowski, with great success.

Cape Town.—In the Good Hope Hall the combined choral societies gave a performance of "The Messiah," on September 5, as a complimentary farewell and benefit to Madame Marie Hooton, Mr. Edward Branscombe, and Mr. Daniel Price, whose singing during their short stay in the neighbourhood has been greatly admired. The chorus and orchestra, numbering over 300 performers, gave a splendid rendering of the work, while the soloists, together with Miss Rutherford (soprano), were recipients of varied tributes of esteem throughout the evening. Mr. Barrow-Dowling conducted, as usual, and the orchestra was led by Mr. Percy Ould.

Dover.—The Dover Choral Union is making arrangements for the coming season, which will open with Sullivan's "Martyr of Antioch," in December, followed by Gounod's "Redemption," in April or May. Mr. H. J. Taylor is the conductor and Mr. R. W. Patmore the honorary secretary.

Frome.—A very successful concert was given in the Mechanics' Hall, on the 5th ult., by Miss Bessie Grant. The audience was large and appreciative and the pieces were well rendered by the following:—Miss Dorothea Tucker (violin), Miss Bessie Grant, and the Royal Windsor Glee Singers—Messrs. Walter Clay, Abel Starkey, David Humphries, and Walter Dodds. Mr. Tom Clare was the able accompanist.

Kogerstone (Mon.).—On September 28 a very successful Harvest Festival was given at St. John's Church, in the presence of a crowded congregation. Adlam's Evening Service in F, Stainer's "Ye shall dwell in the land," and a harvest carol, "Holy is the seedtime," by Lowe, were all very effectively rendered. The soloists, Mr. Richard Cashmore and Master Charles Williams, gave great satisfaction, and Mr. James Matthews presided at the organ.

Portsmouth—The musical societies of Portsmouth are preparing their programmes for the winter. The Borough of Portsmouth Philharmonic Society, with Mr. Monk Gould as conductor, has selected Sullivan's "Martyr of Antioch" for its concert in December. The Portsmouth Musical Association, under Mr. W. D. Pillow's baton, will give Mendelssohn's "Athalie" during the season.

Whitley (Northumberland).—A successful performance of Haydn's "Creation," Parts I. and II., was given in Trinity Wesleyan Church, on the 9th ult., under the direction of the organist, Mr. A. Brown Thompson. There was a very large congregation.

Organ Appointments.—Mr. James Young, Organist and Choirmaster to St. Mary's Church, W. Horsley, Surrey.—Mr. F. W. Appleyard, to St. Peter's, Broad Lane, Tottenham.—Mr. W. Rhodes, to St. John's Parish Church, Sheffield.—Mr. Frederick Isherwood-Plummer, to Wesley Church, Birkdale, Southport.—Mr. T. J. Crawford, Organist and Choirmaster to St. Paul's Parish Church, Camden Square.

Choir Appointments.—Mr. Albert Everett (Tenor), to St. Stephen's, Walbrook.—Mr. S. Seymour Smith (Choirmaster), to Brockley Presbyterian Church.—Mr. F. W. Cheeseman (Solo Tenor), to St. George's, Bloomsbury.

ANSWERS TO CORRESPONDENTS.

W.—We have referred to the original edition of Boyce's anthem "I have surely built thee an house," published by the composer's widow in 1790. It has no accompaniment. The last bass note (B) in bar 13 of the trio in A minor is figured ♯; but although the final chord in bar 15 has no D sharp, this chord should be the same as in bar 13, and not a six-four chord. Boyce probably did not trouble himself about "the chord of the thirteenth"; and if he had been asked to account for the harmony he might very well have replied in the words of Mendelssohn, who, upon being invited to give the root of the first chord in his Wedding March, replied, "I don't know, and I don't care. I like it."

H. W. J.—A complete list of Beethoven's compositions, with dates, is given in Grove's "Dictionary of Music and Musicians," Vol. IV., p. 534. Your illustrations must be regulated by your resources. It would be better to keep to the chamber music—such, for instance, as selections from the pianoforte works, one of the Romances for the violin, one or two movements from the string quartets, some songs, &c. The list above mentioned, studied in conjunction with the biography of Beethoven by Sir George Grove in Vol. I. of his "Dictionary," would furnish you with ample material for illustrating the three periods of the master's art-life.

Bombay.—Saint-Saëns's "Danse Macabre" was written in 1874, and was not composed for any special occasion, but is a symphonic poem like "Phaëton," "Le Rouet d'Omphale," &c. Yes; it was performed in the Catacombs of Paris some years ago, when certain of the élite of the city assembled themselves together to hear the weird strains of the "Danse Macabre," "down among the dead men."

Basso.—The solo bass part in Mr. J. F. Barnett's "Ancient Mariner" was sung by Mr. Santley at the production of the work, Birmingham Musical Festival, 1867, and in all probability it was written for the eminent baritone.

W. D.—The Symphony in A minor, Nonet, Quintet, and the two String Quartets by Mr. Coleridge-Taylor are still in manuscript. Three movements of the Symphony were played at a Royal College of Music concert at St. James's Hall, on March 6, 1896.

H. M. B.—The following pieces for harmonium and violin will probably meet your requirements:—Offertoire, Elevation, Communion, and Prière, four pieces by Gounod; Aria, by Philip Scharwenka; and the Andante from Mendelssohn's Violin Concerto.

P. T.—Books 1, 2, 10, and 17 of Pianoforte Studies, edited by Franklin Taylor, would doubtless suit your pupil. Mr. Taylor's Primer of Pianoforte-playing is published by Messrs. Macmillan, price One Shilling.

Lento.—(1) The best musical dictionary is Grove's, which Messrs. Novello are now issuing at the reduced price of £2. (2) Try Popp's Flute Tutor in the Peters' edition.

Hum.—The humming accompaniment to glees, &c. (called "A bouche fermée"), is produced with the teeth closed and the lips nearly so.

Musical.—Yes, you are quite right. One continuous sound occupying an entire bar of 9-8 time is written as a dotted minim tied to a dotted crotchet.

T. R.—"Flowers of Ireland" ("Erin"), by Benedict, and "Air Irlandais," by Sydney Smith, are effective pianoforte pieces on Irish melodies.

W. E.—Macfarren's "Harmony" and the same author's Lectures on Harmony (Longmans) will probably solve your harmony problem.

Tenor.—The prize medals at the Royal Academy of Music are only awarded to the students of that Institution.

"This charming work was composed for the pupils of King Edward VI.'s High School for Girls, Birmingham, and bears all the best marks of the composer's characteristically graceful style. ODE TO THE PASSIONS

BY

WILLIAM COLLINS

SET TO MUSIC FOR CHORUS AND ORCHESTRA

BY

FREDERIC H. COWEN.

Vocal Score, Price Two Shillings.

String Parts, 7s.; Full Score and Wind Parts, MS.; Vocal Parts, 9d. each.

THE TIMES.

Passages of delicate grace are admirably contrasted with more vigorous scenes, and the massive harmonies of the closing invocation to music, with their skilful building-up of a really impressive climax, reach a level that the composer has most seldom attained before.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

Cowen's "Ode to the Passions" was undoubtedly the success of the afternoon, and advanced another step towards acceptance as that which contains the element of greatness. Mr. Cowen was "called" and enthusiastically applauded. He deserved it. . . . The setting of Collins's fine ode is one that commands the admiration of every unprejudiced amateur. It excels in comprehensiveness of expression, in easy mastery of the art which accurately fits the tone to the word, and in picturesqueness, so vivid as to appear the work of genius.

MORNING POST.

This is undoubtedly one of the most remarkable works written by Mr. Cowen, or, for the matter of that, by any Englishman. The freshness of the themes, the masterly orchestration, the wealth of fancy and ingenuity of resource combine to render the Ode a work of great and enduring value.

DAILY NEWS.

In many respects it shows the composer at his best, and as the Ode is not too long nor too full of difficulties, and, moreover, as it is notable for that melodic inspiration of which Mr. Cowen has the rarely bestowed gift, there is not much doubt that it will speedily become popular with choral societies.

DAILY CHRONICLE.

The score is graphic and picturesque, but not involved. . . . Of late years Mr. Cowen has given an expectant world nothing more characterised by his accustomed daintiness and grace, or, it may be added, more instinct with the force and impulse that, if displayed with equal skill on a larger canvas, might result in a majestic work, calculated to hold its own during a later generation.

DAILY GRAPHIC.

Mr. Cowen's Ode is a genuine success; indeed, I should be inclined to rank it above anything he has yet written for the concert-room. . . . Mr. Cowen's Ode was received with great enthusiasm, and must be counted one of the great successes of the festival.

DAILY MAIL.

Mr. Cowen's latest cantata is one of his best inspirations. From first to last the music is interesting, the melodies are bright and taking, and the composer shows his mastery of modern instrumental resource.

GLOBE.

Mr. Cowen's work deserves nothing but unlimited praise. . . . Short as the Ode is, it is a little masterpiece, and should prove one of the most lasting successes of the week.

THE GUARDIAN.

Mr. Cowen has seldom been more happily inspired. The charming sylvan scene and the broad and flowing strains of the Invocation to Music are passages of very remarkable merit well deserving the success attained.

THE SEASONS

NEW SUITE FOR FULL ORCHESTRA

COMPOSED BY

EDWARD GERMAN.

String Parts, 18s. 6d.
Full Score and Wind Parts, MS.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

The music is full of the composer's wonderful vitality and distinguished by his usual command of every orchestral resource.

STANDARD.

The first number is based on melodious themes, the second subject being particularly expressive and graceful. . . . The following movement is a Harvest Dance. In this Mr. German is in his happiest humour. The chief melody is a splendid old ballad-like fling of dance time, to which it is almost impossible to keep the feet from beating time, and when, later in the movement, it is played slowly, it acquires a humorous suggestiveness that is irresistible.

MORNING POST.

A set of brilliant and elaborate tone pictures remarkable chiefly for the excellence of the orchestral treatment. The second number, "Summer," is the one most likely to become popular. . . . Mr. German's mastery of orchestral technique has often been happily exemplified, and the present work again exhibits his talent in the blending of instrumental tone colours to great advantage.

DAILY CHRONICLE.

The "Spring," "Autumn," and "Winter" (Christmastide) movements are replete with ingenuity, and possess the freshness that has rendered his Gipsy Suite and Shakespearean Incidental Music notable.

DAILY GRAPHIC.

It is delightful. The melodies are pleasing and the orchestration extraordinarily rich and suggestive. It is difficult to choose where all is good, but perhaps the most attractive numbers at a first hearing are the tender and graceful "Autumn" section and the brisk "Harvest Dance" which does duty for summer.

OBSERVER.

The most attractive number is the second, entitled "Harvest Dance," which is based upon a subject of such rhythmic force and strong melodic character that it is almost impossible to keep a still head while the dance notes fill the air; and when, in the course of development, the melody is played slowly, it acquires a savour of mock sagacity which is irresistibly humorous.

OVERTURE
BY
S. COLERIDGE-TAYLOR.
(Op. 30, No. 3.)

Pianoforte Arrangement by THE COMPOSER.

Price Two Shillings net.
String Parts, 5s.; Wind Parts and Full Score, MS.

THE TIMES.

Like everything Mr. Coleridge-Taylor writes, it is full of character and originality, with a profusion of beautiful melodic ideas set off to the best advantage by treatment of a most effective kind. The success of the Overture and the Cantata was immediate and its reception spontaneously enthusiastic.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

That it will stand alone on very many occasions I am sure, so fine is the workmanship, so rich in ideas and devices, and so melodious are the themes which the young composer treats with breadth and sincerity.

STANDARD.

Effective uses of rhythm and boldness of harmonic treatment give piquancy to the Overture, which, in its entirety, is a masterly and fascinating composition.

MORNING POST.

The new Overture is a very interesting work, full of fiery energy, scored with consummate art, and containing broadly melodious phrases.

DAILY CHRONICLE.

Even were it not connected with any story with which the listeners were more or less acquainted, this Overture would win notice on account of the purity of its sentiment and general refinement. . . . Throughout the composer exhibits the fancy, breadth, and command of modern orchestral resources observable in all the instrumental compositions he has yet submitted. It is safe to prophesy that this Overture will henceforward be played at every important performance of the Cantata.

DAILY GRAPHIC.

It has all the distinctive qualities of Mr. Coleridge-Taylor's music, his originality both of form and melody, his extraordinary instinct for the right use of his orchestra, and his freedom from academic conventionality. It is remarkable, too—as, indeed, is the whole cantata—for economy of material and for the wise restraint which the young composer has imposed upon himself in the matter of local colour. . . . The performance must rank as one of the triumphs of the Festival.

OBSERVER.

The music is full of youthful energy and desire, exuberance and insistence, and these attributes are intensified by the boldness of the harmonic scheme and the method of orchestration. It was tremendously applauded.

SUNDAY TIMES.

An extremely picturesque and effective Overture.

IMPORTANT TO PIANISTS.

THE AUTO-EXAMINER IN SCALES AND ARPEGGIOS

BY

J. MARSHALL BUCKLEY.

An entirely new work, which has received the highest encomiums from all musicians who have seen it, such as Dr. J. C. Bridge, M.A., Samuel Aitken, Hon. Sec. Associated Boards, and many others.

This work is laid out according to the requirements of the Ass. Boards, R.A.M. and R.C.M.—Auto-Examiner A.; the Incorporated Society of Musicians and Trinity College—Auto-Examiner B., in such a manner that students may practise as they will be examined, and may, in a regular daily quota, cover the whole of their Scale and Arpeggio work each week, or fortnight, as may be convenient.

There is no possibility of any item being overlooked or neglected, a thing hitherto unattainable.

This work is not only available for examination candidates, but should be in the possession of every pianist who wishes to keep abreast of his work.

"Students cannot be too careful to avoid a stereotyped style of practising scales and arpeggios. Your manual guards very effectively against this, and I am sure it will be a very great help both to teachers and pupils.

"Joseph C. Bridge, M.A., Mus. Doc."

"Your excellent work, most valuable to any student."

"Samuel Aitken, Hon. Sec. Ass. Boards. (Unofficial)."

VARIATIONS

EDWARD ELGAR.

(Op. 36.)

String Parts, Ten Shillings. Full Score and Wind Parts (in the Press).
Arranged for Pianoforte Solo by the Composer.
Price Three Shillings and Sixpence.

THE TIMES.

It is exceedingly clever, often charming, and always original, and excellently worked out. The composer was warmly applauded at its close.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

Well wrought and ingenious are all these variations, exhibiting in a very high degree Mr. Elgar's fertility of resource and the ample freedom of his method. As those who had previous experience of their author expected, the variations are quite modern in style and texture. . . . will certainly add to the composer's reputation.

DAILY NEWS.

The sections entitled "Nimrod" and "Dorabella" were much applauded, and also the last movement, which has now been revised, although the alterations do not appear to be very great.

MORNING POST.

The variations are all remarkably clever, and some of them are distinctly humorous. The orchestral treatment is throughout ingenious. Mr. Elgar was called on to the platform at the conclusion of his interesting work, and loudly applauded. . . . The matter since added at the conclusion of the last variation was heard to-night for the first time, and was a great improvement, imparting increased brilliancy and importance to the work.

DAILY CHRONICLE.

Mr. Edward Elgar conducted his admirably written "Variations on an Original Theme," produced at a Richter concert in London in the summer. The work was then warmly approved, and its merits are increasingly conspicuous on a second hearing. The variations that were special favourites this evening were the ninth and tenth. Upon the brilliant Finale, with its bold march, Mr. Elgar was also highly complimented.

DAILY GRAPHIC.

Mr. Elgar's new work scored a genuine success. It exhibits most happily his great inventive power and his striking ability in handling his orchestra. He has here produced a series of miniatures, drawn and coloured with the utmost cleverness and originality. Some are tender, some are graceful, and some are humorous, but all reveal the touch of a master. . . . The variations are brimful of character and humour. Since the first performance the composer has rewritten the coda, and given it greater importance, much to the advantage of the work as a whole. The performance was a fine one, and confirmed one in the belief that this is not only Mr. Elgar's masterpiece, but one of the most brilliant orchestral compositions that have been produced in the British school, or in any school for that matter, for many years past.

ECHO.

They are of commanding merit, of comprehensive charm, and well deserve to take a permanent position in our repertory of orchestral music.

GLOBE.

The variations are always interesting, well-contrasted, and scored with a real sense of tone-colour, and some of them are quite beautiful by themselves, apart from all considerations of form and structure.

GUARDIAN.

Mr. Elgar may therefore be very warmly congratulated on the unqualified success of his work, which was given the high compliment of receiving its first interpretation from Dr. Richter and his famous band. . . . The variations are extremely well contrasted, and the orchestration, though masterly and effective throughout, is always treated by the composer as a means to an end, and not as an end in itself. . . . The whole work will add greatly to Mr. Elgar's already high reputation, and it is to be hoped that an opportunity will soon be given of hearing it again. . . . All the favourable impressions produced at the first performance were amply confirmed on this occasion, and it would not, in our judgment, be an exaggeration to say that Mr. Elgar is the most eminent master of orchestral effect which our country has produced, with the possible exception of Sir Arthur Sullivan.

GRAND COTTAGE PIANOS

EVERY INSTRUMENT WARRANTED TEN YEARS.

The following is one of the numerous Testimonials received from purchasers of these Pianos:—

Mr. Walker. Lowerhead Row, Leeds.

Dear Sir,—We, the undersigned, have much pleasure in giving our testimony to the excellence of the Steinmayer Pianoforte which you have sent for the Trinity College Practical Examinations at Leeds.

See following Extract from "Musical Opinion and Music Trades Review," September 1:—

"Time was—and not so long since, either—when London monpolised all the wholesale trade of the kingdom in connection with the importation or manufacture of musical instruments. Now it is hardly correct to speak of it as a centre. This moralising is induced by the fact of so many country friends going ahead in competition with the London houses. Now we have Mr. Walker, of Bradford and Leeds, to the front with the Steinmayer pianos. And wonderfully good they are. He has found them so successful that he is compelled to take larger premises, the many orders he is receiving from all parts of the country making it an imperative necessity with him to have enlarged space for the purpose of storing or packing the instruments. It is always pleasant to notice enterprise and energy meeting with their due reward, and I recommend piano buyers, when near Bradford or Leeds, to look in upon Mr. Walker, and to inspect his stock of Steinmayer pianos which are wonderfully low in price."

THE TEN VIRGINS

FOR FOUR SOLO VOICES AND CHORUS

BY

ALFRED R. GAUL.

(Op. 42.)

COMPOSER OF "THE HOLY CITY," "RUTH," "PASSION SERVICE," "JOAN OF ARC," &c.

"Philharmonic and St. Paul's Choral Union.—Two of Mr. Alfred R. Gaul's Cantatas, 'Joan of Arc' and 'The Holy City,' have been previously performed in Leamington. The verdict on 'The Ten Virgins' must be that it quite fulfils the rich promise of these former musical essays. There are the same excellent orchestral writing, the same melodious solo numbers, the same massive choral effects; and in some respects there is a noticeable advance on the previous works—a still greater unity of design, the finer touch of the true artist-musician. The libretto of 'The Ten Virgins' has been compiled with admirable taste from the Scripture narrative of the parable, and from other portions of the sacred writings. To these there are some happily selected additions, of which the most noticeable are Miss Winkworth's translation of the German chorale 'Sleepers, Awake,' and Lord Tennyson's 'Too Late, one of the pearls of song that stud the jewelled verses of 'The Idylls of the King.' The composer has made use of the chorale in the happiest manner imaginable, while the chorus from Lord Tennyson has received a musical setting which it is the highest compliment to say is in every way worthy of the poetry. There is a pleasant absence of musical pyrotechnics and tricky effects in 'The Ten Virgins,' and a welcome return to the first musical principles which gave us the great compositions which are always likely to stand unrivalled before the world. The choral writing in 'The Ten Virgins' is alone something to be thankful for, and as we have intimated, it is only one of the many musical virtues of the Cantata. . . . The soprano air 'Sun of my soul,' one of the gems. . . . The soprano air 'Wisdom crieth in the streets,' a truly beautiful composition. . . . The contralto air 'God willeth not the death of a sinner,' a strikingly dramatic air. . . . The tenor air 'Thy kingdom come,' one of the 'purple patches' of the work. . . . The quartets contain not a little very charming music."—Leamington Chronicle.

"A new work from the pen of the composer of 'The Holy City' and 'Joan of Arc' will be heartily welcomed by all who love the art of music."—Newcastle Journal.

"Mr. Gaul is to the fore with a new Sacred Cantata, and Choral Societies are pleasantly concerned thereat, for they admire the Midland composer because he gives them good music without putting too great a strain upon executive means. The work will certainly go through Saxondom in the wake of its predecessors from the same pen."—London Daily Telegraph.

"Must attain popularity wherever heard, and will assuredly soon be placed among the foremost compositions of this kind by present-day writers. . . . treated in a thoroughly artistic manner. . . . a perfect wealth of melody and striking individuality of style. Infinitely superior to any previous effort of the composer."—Liverpool Daily Courier.

"A very large audience assembled in the Town Hall (Newcastle-on-Tyne) on Monday night. . . . The first part of the programme was devoted to Gaul's new Cantata 'The Ten Virgins.' The opinions expressed on the occasion of its production at South Shields we still maintain, further acquaintance only serving to confirm them. The Cantata is replete with charming music of that school which every one can appreciate, and which found so distinguished a master in Mendelssohn. If composers would have their works popular with choral societies, it is only reasonable to expect that they will bestow a fair share of their attention upon the choruses. The old masters knew this, and there is no doubt that the fact has much to do with the long-continue, popularity of their works; and there is equally little doubt, we think that the principal cause of the failure of so many works produced now-a-days is the uninteresting nature of the choruses. Compare the choruses of the three most popular works ever produced—'The Messiah,' 'Creation,' and 'Elijah'—with a large number of modern works, and our meaning will be clear. If we mistake not, such thoughts as these passed through Mr. Gaul's mind when he set himself to compose those works which have placed him in the front rank of English composers—the 'Holy City,' 'Joan of Arc,' and 'The Ten Virgins'—and that the public endorse his views is proved by the enormous sale which these works have had."—Newcastle Daily Journal, Dec. 17, 1890.

"The subject is an excellent one for a Cantata . . . a stronger work than 'Joan of Arc.' . . . Melodious, vocal, and of moderate difficulty, and, like Mr. Gaul's earlier Cantatas, will be eagerly welcomed by societies in search of new works having these characteristics."—Newcastle Daily Leader, Dec. 16, 1890.

"Bow and Bromley Institute Choir.—On the 22nd ult. this Society came forward with the first performance in London of Mr. Gaul's new Cantata 'The Ten Virgins.' The hall was overcrowded by an audience that was disposed to encore every other number of the work. If the verdict of a miscellaneous audience, that could have no possible reason for being favourably prejudiced, is of any account in estimating the merit of a new work, a career that will rival that of the same composer's 'Holy City' may be predicted for 'The Ten Virgins.' That Mr. Gaul should have secured this undoubted popular success with a work far more contrapuntal than any of his former works, is a remarkable tribute to his power of welding science and beauty into one whole."—Musical Times, Dec. 1, 1890.

"Not only full of good music, but displays individuality of style Mr. Gaul's powers of melodic invention still flow on, and his treatment of the voices is as noteworthy as ever for neatness of workmanship and knowledge of effect. . . . a distinct advance upon any of its predecessors."—Birmingham Daily Post.

"That 'The Ten Virgins' is a much finer work than the everywhere favourite 'Holy City' we have no doubt whatever. Mr. Gaul has aimed at fine outline and telling colouring, and all that he has aimed at he has achieved."—Birmingham Daily Gazette.

The above Cantata has been specially planned to meet the requirements of Musical Societies, the greater portion being choral, including three numbers for Sopranos and Contraltos (The Virgins). In the matter of the Orchestral parts, the following plan has been adopted—i.e., when the Strings are tacet, instead of employing rests, anything that is written for other instruments will appear in small notes in the string parts, and a similar plan has been adopted with regard to the reed instruments—i.e., any Clarinet or Oboe Solo will be expressed in small notes in the Flute part. This arrangement, it is hoped, will make it possible to give a fair rendering of the work with a limited orchestra.

Price, paper cover, 2s. 6d.; paper boards, 3s.; Cloth, gilt, 4s.; Tonic Sol-fa, 1s.; Vocal parts, each 1s.
Ent. Sta. Hall.] Words only, 5s. per 100.

The gratuitous loan of instrumental parts may be had on application to the Composer, and full liberty is given to perform this Cantata and to insert the words in any programme without further permission.

Sheffield Musical Festival, 1899.—"King Olaf."—"Ironbeard's solo, 'All-Father, I come,' proved Mr. Charles Knowles to be a singer fully equipped for a work of this high class."—Sheffield Independent, Oct. 12, 1899.

"Mr. Charles Knowles, the Yorkshire bass, who made a successful appearance at the Leeds Musical Festival last year, has gained in experience and also in vocal power. I should call him a genuine bass and not a baritone. He gave the 'Challenge of Thor' with fine effect, and his interpretation of the death scene of the brave old pagan warrior was marked by artistic force."—Birmingham Post, Oct. 12, 1899.

"Samson and Delilah."—"Mr. Charles Knowles was excellent as Abimelech."—Liverpool Post, Oct. 13, 1899.

"Golden Legend."—"Mr. Charles Knowles made the part of the Forester really interesting by his reading."—Birmingham Post, Oct. 14, 1899.

"King Saul."—"Mr. Charles Knowles gave sonorous and generally speaking well-judged effect to the words of Samuel."—London Daily Telegraph, Oct. 14, 1899.

"Mr. Charles Knowles's Samuel, apart from mannerisms which will be shed with wider experience, sang the lines allotted to the Prophet with fulness and sonority of voice that will assuredly place him among the favoured candidates for principal work at our chief Festival."—Scotsman, Oct. 14, 1899.

"Mr. Charles Knowles imparted to the character of Samuel much of the sternness and severity associated with Elijah. His fine powerful voice was hardly suggestive of the 'aged seer,' but he was most impressive throughout, and in the scene with the people he asserted the prerogative with all the dignity of one accustomed to command. In the dialogue with Saul he was excellent, and his interpretation all through was very fine. In the scene at Endor the utterances of Samuel were solemnly delivered, and altogether Mr. Knowles advanced his already high reputation."—Birmingham Post, Oct. 14, 1899.

". . . But the great triumph of the concert was achieved by Mr. Arthur Barlow, whose voice and method are beyond praise. After 'Honour and Arms' he received a genuine ovation."—Yorkshire Post, April 19, 1899.

THE MUSICAL TIMES AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR.
DECEMBER 1, 1899.

TO OUR READERS.

IT may not be without interest if, in a few simple words, we set forth a MUSICAL TIMES "plan of campaign"—to adopt the language of the hour—for the closing year of the century, 1900.

The biographical sketches that have appeared during the last two years and more, and which have been received with so much favour, will be continued, with, of course, their attendant special portraits. The following musicians have kindly consented to sit for biographical portraits during the course of the year:—Dr. PHILIP ARMES, Mr. EDWARD ELGAR, Mr. EATON FANING, Mr. ALFRED GIBSON, Mr. GEORGE HENSCHEL, Dr. HENRY HILES, M. EMILE SAURET, and Herr AUGUST WILHELMJ.

It is proposed to furnish somewhat similar biographies of distinguished musicians who are no longer in the flesh. These articles will not be a mere compilation of existing information, but they will contain new and interesting facts by which the personalities of those biographised will be invested with life. THOMAS ATTWOOD (Mozart's English pupil) and SAMUEL SEBASTIAN WESLEY will probably be amongst the earliest of this series of departed worthies. Special portraits, as in the case of the living men, and probably some fac-similes, &c., will add to the interest of these biographies.

A new departure will be a series of educational articles, contributed by experts in their several departments. These papers will be written in what, for want of a better term, may be called the "chatty" style—that is to say, they will contain practical hints to teachers and others of what to do, what not to do, and how to do, or to avoid doing, as the case may be, and so on. The following gentlemen have already signified their willingness to contribute to this series: Mr. F. H. COWEN, "Conducting"; Dr. HENRY COWARD, "The training of a chorus"; Mr. ALFRED GIBSON, "Violin teaching"; Mr. E. H. LEMARE, "Organ accompaniments"; Dr. W. G. MCNAUGHT, "Class singing"; and Mr. FRANKLIN TAYLOR, "Pianoforte teaching."

Amongst other articles in prospect the first place must be assigned to a series of three by Dr. ALBRECHT MENDELSSOHN-BARTHOLDY, grandson of the composer, who proposes to write upon "Mendelssohn's relations to the German composers of his time"—(1) Weber and Spohr, (2) Schumann and others, and (3) Wagner and others. These articles, written specially for THE MUSICAL TIMES, will doubtless throw fresh light upon Mendelssohn's intercourse with his musical contemporaries, the information being derived from original letters, &c., not hitherto made public, in his grandson's possession, or to which he will have free access.

In addition to the above Mendelssohniana, articles have been kindly promised by Mr. JOSEPH BENNETT, Sir ALEXANDER MACKENZIE, and Sir JOHN STAINER, on subjects which are sure to prove interesting. Other topics will be "Rossini in London," "A History of the Madrigal Society," derived from the records of this ancient Society, "Schubert's settings of English poets," &c., contributed by the EDITOR.

Such then is a brief outline of what we propose to do. Circumstances may prevent its complete achievement, but every effort will be made to carry out this sketch programme, which will naturally be amplified as the year goes on and opportunity serves.

Finally, no pains will be spared to make this old-established journal—now in the fifty-sixth year of its existence—thoroughly efficient in all its departments, to increase its usefulness, and to make its pages more instructive, companionable, and, above all, readable. May this desire be fulfilled as the year rolls on, so that twelve months hence we may have the pleasure of wishing an enlarged circle of readers, whom we trust we may call friends,

A HAPPY NEW CENTURY!

FRANKLIN TAYLOR.

No one will venture to deny that the teaching of the pianoforte has vastly improved in recent years. Its intellectuality receives an attention that was formerly lacking. The disciples of the bravura school—the Herzites and the Thalbergians—were more or less digitalists. Mere passage-playing, however faultless its technique, will not atone or compensate for the absence of brain and heart in the interpretation of the highest and best music. There is abundant evidence of a rapidly increasing race of intelligent, thoughtful, earnest teachers who are thoroughly alive to the responsibilities of their vocation. Several names might be mentioned of men who have done, and are doing splendid work in the direction of raising the standard of pianoforte teaching in this country; but amongst the foremost would certainly be that of the eminent teacher who forms the subject of this biographical sketch.

Franklin Taylor was born at Birmingham, February 5, 1843. He cannot boast of a musical ancestry, but, as in the case of many other musicians, his earliest teacher was his mother. He distinctly remembers his first pianoforte lesson, although he was four years old at the time. At the age of six he played in public at an Exhibition held in Birmingham. "Bless his little fingers," was the observation of a sympathetic listener, which he remembers having heard at the time. There was, however, not the slightest thought that he would ever become a pianist. In fact, circumstances pointed in the direction of his becoming a church musician and an organist—the pianoforte was quite a "second study." In his early boyhood he became a resident pupil of Thomas Bedsmore, then deputy, though practically organist of Lichfield Cathedral. He lived at Lichfield for some years as Bedsmore's right-hand man. He studied harmony, played from old figured-bass scores, and gained much experience from participating in "the daily round" of a cathedral organist. At the age of thirteen he played a service in Lichfield Cathedral, and on one occasion, when Bedsmore was seized with sudden illness, young Taylor took all the services for a whole week. He also played the cornet—"the second cornet," he modestly says—in Bedsmore's Brass Band. These B. B. B. instrumentalists played at flower shows and similar functions.

MR. DABBS.

At about the time of entering upon his teens, young Taylor returned to his native Birmingham. He became associated with a Mr. Dabbs, who was a tailor and had a shop on Summerhill Parade. For many years he was Treasurer of the Festival Choral Society and was greatly respected by the members. Worthy Mr. Dabbs started some singing classes in the town on the Hullah method. Although Master Taylor was nominally the accompanist to these vocal musikings, not the least important part of his work consisted of coaching the conductor, Mr. Dabbs! A "choral meeting of the pupils of Mr. Dabbs's singing classes" was given in the new Music Hall, Broad Street, on December 16, 1856. "Master Taylor" not only accompanied the vocal music, but played a pianoforte solo. A local newspaper, in a report of the "meeting," said: "Our clever young townsman, Master Taylor, presided at the pianoforte, and in the course of the evening played very beautifully Rosellen's Fantasia 'La Rose de Peronne.'" But the thirteen-year old youth also appeared at this concert in the capacity of a composer. One number in the programme is entitled "National Part-song—'Hurrah for England' —F. Taylor. (Composed expressly for Mr. Dabbs's pupils.)" This and two other part-songs found their way into print, being published in the "Choral Wreath, a new work by Hamilton, of Glasgow, published at the request of Mr. Dabbs for the use of his classes." Only the other day this juvenile composition was recalled to Mr. Taylor's memory when he read in the newspapers of the departure of troops to the Transvaal to the strains of "Hurrah for England." These patriotic strains may have been those of his Dabbs days. Another product of that youthful period was "The Emerald Waltzes," dedicated to "John Ratcliff, Esq., F.S.A., Mayor of Birmingham," and published in London.

ORGANIST OF THE OLD MEETING HOUSE.

While still in his teens Franklin Taylor was appointed organist of the Old Meeting House, Birmingham, a post which he held for some years. He became a pianoforte pupil of Charles Edwin Flavell, and took an interest in all the musical activities of Birmingham. Like the majority of those successful men whose "ups and downs" have been chronicled in these columns, Mr. Taylor has all his life long been an earnest student—always observing, never letting slip an opportunity for acquiring knowledge and experience, and, in fact, making every possible use of that precious faculty—"picking-up."

LEIPZIG.

Friends in the congregation of "The Old Meeting" were very kind to the youthful organist. At their instigation he was sent to Leipzig to further pursue his studies. He entered the Conservatorium in July, 1859, as No. 766; he was then aged sixteen. He studied under Moscheles and Plaidy (a splendid teacher from whom he also took private lessons) for the pianoforte, and Hauptmann, Papperitz, and Richter for theory. He not only derived much enjoyment, but acquired valuable knowledge while breathing the musical atmosphere of Leipzig. He played at many "at homes," and at the house of Madame Frege he met everybody who was anybody in the art circle of the old city.

CONJURING. NIGGERS. KRIKETT!

Leipzig student-life was not all music in those days. There was a very interesting colony of young English fellows studying at the Conservatorium. Here are their names: Walter Bache (like Taylor, a Birmingham man), John Francis Barnett, and Arthur Sullivan; of other nationalities: Dudley Buck, Edward Dannreuther, Edvard Grieg, and Carl Rosa. It is quite evident that Sullivan, Taylor and Co. contributed their share of fun to those Leipzig friends with whom they were acquainted. "At Leipzig," says Mr. Taylor, "I had a very strong mania for conjuring." I got together an elaborate apparatus for the business. I gave several jugglery exhibitions. One was at the house of Kistner, the publisher, and as the talking part had to be entirely in German, I had to be very quick with my patter. I thought it was rather an achievement. On another occasion I gave a legerdemain show at the house of Moscheles, when I made a pudding in Moscheles's hat!" It is no wonder to learn that Mendelssohn's old friend was greatly amused and astonished at what may be called this crowning feature of the entertainment.

"You mentioned 'niggers,' Mr. Taylor." "Yes; we had a regular Christy Minstrel troupe. There were four of us—Domenico Dragonetti Barnett (now of Cheltenham, a grandson of old Robert Lindley, the violoncellist, and a son of John Barnett), Arthur Seymour Sullivan (who has composed a "Golden Legend"), Leonidas Polk Wheat (an American), and myself. We had proper nigger wigs (although Sullivan, with his immense shock of black hair, hardly needed any addition to his pericranium), pasteboard standing shirt collars of a very pronounced Gladstonian type, and we made our faces very black. Oh! the agony of washing it off! Barnett played the bones, Sullivan the tambourine, Wheat the violin, and, as there was not such a thing as a banjo to be had in Germany, I extemporised that indispensable Ethiopian instrument by playing the part upon a viola, pizzicato! We sang four-part songs. Sullivan sang 'Uncle Ned,' while I contributed 'Oh! Susannah'; and we played in fine style the 'Yankee Doodle Galop.'

"We started a cricket club in Leipzig, which consisted mostly of American and English students. Some Germans joined from time to time, but as we used to bowl at their shins, they became less enthusiastic about the game and withdrew themselves and their bruised stumps. We obtained two balls from London, but our only bat we had specially made, from our own drawings and specification, by a firm of pianoforte makers in Leipzig! Our national game attracted a good deal of attention, and we were very proud of an article that appeared in the Leipzig Tageblatt upon our doings, entitled 'Das Noble Krikettspiel.'"

At Leipzig, Taylor, who had one room, lived in the same house with Sullivan. As the latter had two rooms, Taylor was glad to make use of one of them in order to get warm in the early part of the cold winter mornings. Amongst other incidents of those jolly student days was a performance of Romberg's "Toy Symphony," at which Ferdinand David was present. Taylor played the cuckoo so beautifully true to nature that his colleagues carried him round the room in triumph. On another occasion he and Moscheles (then verging upon the age of seventy) extemporized dance music on two pianofortes, while other occupants of the room were engaged upon terpsichorean pleasures. "It was rare fun," he says, "trying to dodge one another." This recalls a similar experience of Moscheles and another of his distinguished pupils—Felix Mendelssohn, during the latter's visits to London.

Another anecdote, in Mr. Taylor's own words, must conclude these Leipzig humorisms. "A rather inexperienced student had composed a Trio, which was to be performed in private on some special occasion, and which some of us had the greatest curiosity to hear. All appeals to be allowed to be present at a rehearsal had been met by a decided refusal; nevertheless, we—Carl Rosa, Hegar, and I—were determined to hear it, if possible. Accordingly, by a little management, we were permitted by the landlord of the house in which the rehearsals took place to listen unseen to the new strains. We considered it to be a very poor composition. We thought that the 'cello part was a mere duplication of the bass of the pianoforte part, and, worse than all, the whole thing was an absolute imitation of Mozart! In fact, we were very much down upon the poor man. Judge of our astonishment when we were afterwards told that owing to the parts of the new composition not being ready, a Trio of Haydn's had been played instead!"

PARIS. MADAME SCHUMANN.

Mr. Taylor left Leipzig in 1861. After a short holiday in Birmingham he went to Paris, where he spent the winter of 1861-62. Here he took lessons from Madame Schumann entirely upon her husband's music. He had the entrée of a "good circle" in Paris. At the house of Madame Viardot he frequently met Damcke, Herz, Schulhoff, Tellefsen (Chopin's pupil), Marmontel, and Heller, to whom he often had an opportunity of playing. Stephen Heller had a curious combination of pianoforte and writing-table in one, at which he used to compose: he always played his inspirations and then wrote them down without moving from his seat. Rossini was another celebrity he visited. The veteran opera-composer used to say that he intended to "write a lot of pianoforte music."

LONDON. HIS FIRST PUPIL.

In the spring of 1862 Franklin Taylor, then aged nineteen, settled in London. Like Sullivan, he soon found a kind and warm-hearted friend in Sir George Grove—in fact, they were the first two of "Grove's young men." His first pupil was the late Miss Lucy Grove, the eldest daughter of his good friend. He and Sullivan stayed with the Groves at Lower Sydenham for weeks at a time. On one occasion the two "niggers" of Leipzig set up such an extraordinary hullabalooing at Sydenham that not only was the old wooden house mightily shaken, but the neighbourhood became so disturbed that (according to tradition) policemen came running all the way from Greenwich! Much music was made under Sir George's roof, and "we incensed him into Schumann," recalls Mr. Taylor. At this time Taylor shared rooms with Carl Rosa, then a violinist, and the two fellow-students played much together in their London lodgings.

LONDON ORGANISTSHIPS.

In order to get his bread and butter, Mr. Taylor soon took an organ appointment. The first—from 1862-66—was at St. Peter's, Charlotte Street, Buckingham Gate, Pimlico, where, by the way, Sir Walter Parratt, as a boy, was at one time organist. The church was formerly a Proprietary Chapel, of which the celebrated Rev. Dr. Dodd, who was hanged for forgery, was, during the last century, the minister. Strange that two distinguished members of the Board of Professors at the Royal College of Music should have been organists of that little church in Pimlico! In April, 1866, Mr. Taylor became organist of Twickenham Church. In the following year he succeeded his friend Arthur Sullivan in the organistship of St. Michael's, Chester Square; but in about 1869 he gave up holding a church appointment. Mr. Taylor says that at St. Michael's, in Sullivan's time, the tenors and basses of the mixed choir were all policemen, because Sir Richard Mayne, then the Chief Commissioner, was a prominent man in the congregation. Whatever shortcomings these vocal guardians of the peace may have had from a musical point of view, they must have had a considerable experience in watching the beat.

A CONDUCTOR OF CHORAL SOCIETIES.

Mr. Taylor has had a very varied experience, just such an one as any rank-and-file man of the profession has passed, or is passing through. He was conductor of "The St. Peter's Choral Class," connected with his church at Pimlico. Concerts, such as "selections from 'The Messiah,' followed by a miscellaneous second part," were duly given under the conductorship of "Mr. Franklin Taylor, pupil of Professor Moscheles." At a soirée in Pimlico he played with "Mr. Arthur Sullivan" a duet for two pianofortes by Thalberg, entitled "Norma." In 1864 he established the Hatcham Choral Society, which he carried on for seven years. It is interesting to turn over the pages of a scrap-book containing some old programmes which show that such works as the "Hymn of Praise," "The First Walpurgis Night," "St. Paul," a selection from "Elijah" were performed. Curiously enough, however, the name of the conductor does not appear in these programmes. As a matter of fact, Mr. Taylor conducted with his left eye, while with his other optic he read the music, which he accompanied on the pianoforte, that being the only instrumental aid. He hunted up many odds and ends of out-of-the-way things for his Hatcham Society; moreover, he wrote out with his own hand the copies in lithographic ink. A similar conductorship was that of the Twickenham Choral Society, beginning in 1886. The leading soprano in that choir was Miss Anna Williams. "I claim to have brought her out," says Mr. Taylor. Yet another was the Sydenham Amateur Choral Society (1870-72). Amongst the names of active members were those of Sir (then Mr.) George Grove, Mr. C. A. Barry, the Rev. A. Ainger, and Miss Louise von Glehn, now Mrs. Creighton, wife of the Bishop of London.

THE NEWSPAPER TRAIN.

In the midst of his varied occupations—church duties, conducting, and teaching—Mr. Taylor was steadily practising with all diligence in preparation for his calling as a solo pianist. He worked very hard. Carl Rosa and he lived together in George Street, Euston Square, a very convenient spot for the pianist, as every Monday morning, winter and summer, Taylor went to Rugby by the newspaper train for a day's pianoforte teaching, returning in the evening at nine o'clock. He made himself a cup of coffee a little before five, reached Rugby at eight for breakfast, and began teaching at nine o'clock. He did not teach at the great school, but had private lady pupils, amongst them being Miss Temple, niece of the then Head Master, who is now Archbishop of Canterbury. Another occupation of these early days must be mentioned in the four-hand arrangement he made of Sir Arthur Sullivan's charming "Tempest" music, which the two friends often played together at Chorley's and elsewhere. It is just possible that this excellent arrangement of some of the best music that Sullivan has ever written is not known so well as it ought to be.

A PUBLIC PERFORMER.

Mr. Taylor came prominently before the public on the occasion of his first appearance at the Crystal Palace Saturday concert of February 18, 1865, when he played Ferdinand Hiller's Pianoforte Concerto in F sharp minor. His success on that occasion may be judged from the following criticism of his performance by the late Mr. J. W. Davison.

> The début of a new pianist, with a concerto if not exactly new, at least new to the Crystal Palace, was another note-worthy incident of this attractive programme. Both music and pianist were successful. The concerto in

F sharp minor, by Herr Ferdinand Hiller—one of Mendelssohn's early and intimate friends, and now, perhaps, the foremost among German musicians—requires more than a single hearing to be thoroughly appreciated. Since it was played by the composer himself (at a Philharmonic concert) it has not been heard in London. It could hardly have reappeared under more favorable circumstances than on Saturday. Mr. Franklin Taylor, a very young man, is already a thorough proficient, and, though unaccustomed to public exhibition, plays with the nerve and steadiness of an experienced professor. His style is earnest and pure, his execution correct and vigorous. He has an excellent touch, an agreeable if not a powerful tone, and a manner of phrasing which, while rarely inexpressive, is never fantastic or overdone. His whole performance was good—as effective as it was legitimate. In the melodious Lied ohne Worte of Mendelssohn (No. 1, Book 6), and Herr Ernst Pauer's "Valse de Concert," which were his solos, Mr. Taylor was equally happy. The Lied was irreproachable.—(The Times, February 20, 1865.)

Two years later (March 9, 1867) he played Mendelssohn's D minor Concerto at the Crystal Palace in such a manner as to call forth a second and still more favourable criticism from Mr. Davison, which he expressed in his own inimitable way in the Musical World, under one of his numerous comical synonyms, that of "Thaddeus Egg":—

Letters to Well-known Characters.

TO DR. A. S. SILENT.

DEAR DOCTOR,—"Two remarks I have to make, two observations I wish to offer," anent the Crystal Palace concert of Saturday last.

The first is to this effect,—Mr. Franklin Taylor played Mendelssohn's second concerto uncommonly well. Sir, Mr. Taylor can read music; also, he can understand what he reads; and, furthermore, he can give it utterance. These are essential qualities in an artist; yet, an artist with these only would be an unfinished production, a sort of musical cherub (without the wings)—all head. You know very well, Doctor, that a complete artist has got a heart. He must feel, as well as comprehend; there must be in him the emotional acting with the intellectual, both combining to do a perfect work. Now, is Mr. Franklin Taylor all head? In other words, has Mr. Franklin Taylor got a heart? I say he has; because no man could have played as he did without one. Here, then, we have the stuff out of which great artists are made—the quick eye, the nimble finger, the comprehending mind, and the emotional power which gives that "touch of nature" necessary to make performer and audience akin. So, on and prosper, Mr. Franklin Taylor, remembering, what you doubtless know, that chemin de fleurs ne conduit pas à la gloire.

The Thatch, March 13th. THADDEUS EGG.

P.S.—Kindly draw the attention of your printer to the initial letter of my place of abode.—T. E.

The services of the new pianist were speedily in demand. He played at the Popular Concerts on January 15, 1866, and, as also at the Crystal Palace, many times subsequently, always with acceptance. He was also a frequent performer at the Birmingham Chamber Concerts, where he was greatly appreciated and heartily welcomed in the place of his birth. In other places, such as Liverpool, he was also looked upon as a pianist of the first rank. It would seem as if the finger of Fate was pointing to the career of a virtuoso for him; but no, he had a better mission to fulfil. The sphere of his work was changed in this way. He had steadily made for himself a name as a first-rate teacher. Many pupils sought his valuable lessons. The necessary practice for public performances had to be obtained between the hours of 7 and 11 p.m., after the exacting work of a day's teaching. Moreover, he suffered from what seemed likely to become chronic rheumatism in his wrists. Looking at the matter from all points of view, he decided, somewhat against his inclination, to give up his public playing, and to devote himself entirely to teaching. The wisdom of the choice has more than justified his decision.

APPOINTMENTS.

Mr. Franklin Taylor was president of the Academy for the Higher Development of Pianoforte-playing, from its foundation by Mr. Oscar Beringer, in 1873, till its dissolution in 1897. He also taught there, one of his pupils being Mr. Battison Haynes. In 1876 the National Training School at Kensington was opened, with Sir Arthur Sullivan as Principal, and Mr. Taylor as one of the first professors. In 1883 he became a professor and one of the Board of Professors at the Royal College of Music, where he is greatly sought after as a teacher of the pianoforte.

A WRITER UPON AND EDITOR OF MUSIC.

Mr. Taylor has used his pen with great advantage in the furtherance of the cause of music, especially from its educational standpoint. His first literary work in this direction was (in 1864) a translation into English of Richter's (his master's) "Harmony," followed later on by the same theorist's "Counterpoint" and "Canon and Fugue." His capital little Primer on "Pianoforte Playing," issued in 1877, is a model of what such a book should be; it is a pity that so useful a treatise is not more widely known. It has had the distinction of a translation into German, published by J. Weber, in Leipzig. An edition has also been issued in America and favourably received by the United States press. In addition to writing a Pianoforte Tutor, he has edited Nos. 1 to 12 of Beethoven's Pianoforte Sonatas. He has also edited six books of Tschaïkowsky's pianoforte works.

He wrote fifty-nine articles in Grove's "Dictionary of Music and Musicians," many being of distinct value and showing much original research. He is also the author of "Double Scales systematically fingered, a supplement to all existing Pianoforte schools," and "Scales and Arpeggios for the Pianoforte" (No. 53 of Novello's Music Primers). He has edited, arranged in groups, and fingered a series of Progressive Studies for the Pianoforte comprising fifty-three books, which have been a great boon to pianoforte teachers. Wherever he found that there was no existing study to supply a special want, he composed one—thus there are eleven of such little pieces scattered about the fifty-three books. A distinguished colleague at the Royal College designates them "exceedingly good," or something equally appreciative. His latest contribution to the literature of his instrument is "Technique and Expression in Pianoforte Playing," a book crowded with useful hints of great value to both teachers and pupils, the outcome of his long experience as a player and teacher. He has also composed a Toy Symphony for pianoforte and toys. This he wrote for the Sydenham Amateur Choral Society. Mr. C. A. Barry, in recalling that period, says: "Taylor was an excellent choirmaster, but very strict. In regard to his capital Toy Symphony, he wrote the trumpet part (compass of three notes) expressly for me. It had to be played on two trumpets—no easy task! Perhaps it was a bit too serious for such a work, but we got a lot of fun in rehearsing and performing it at a public concert."

MUSICAL EXAMINATIONS.

Mr. Taylor is of opinion that musical examinations have distinctly raised the standard of teaching in this country and in the Colonies. He was one of the pioneers of the examinations of the Associated Board of the Royal Academy of Music and the Royal College of Music, of which he is an active member. He has had much to do with the practical working of the examinations and in framing the syllabuses in regard to the pianoforte section. In 1894 he went to South Africa to examine in music for the Cape University, and thus he was the first musical examiner to visit the Colonies. He repeated his visit two years later and found that a distinct advance in the teaching of music had been made during that interval. He recalls the following incident to show the keen desire of a candidate to be examined. At Uitenhage, a place two hours' railway journey from Port Elizabeth, a young lady candidate was inadvertently absent from the examination, at the conclusion of which Mr. Taylor returned to Port Elizabeth. He was seated in the smoking-room of his hotel when two ladies entered the apartment—the younger was the absentee examinee, the other, her governess. They had travelled the two hours' journey by rail to lay siege to the examiner. They knew not his visage, except by description, nor did they know his whereabouts. They had visited all the hotels, looked in at various windows, and at last, about 9 p.m., they tracked the examiner down. All three then made their way to an upper verandah, at one end of which there was an old upright pianoforte. The other occupants of the apartment discreetly moved to a respectful distance, and the examination proceeded. The candidate and her chaperon then started upon their two hours' railway journey home again, which they would reach somewhere about midnight. "There is enthusiasm for you," says Mr. Taylor. "But did she pass?" "Yes; she did," he laughingly replies.

PERSONALIA.

In 1876 Mr. Taylor married the daughter of the late Commissary-General J. H. Sale, and niece of the well-known portrait-painter, Richard Buckner. He has two children, son and daughter, the former being at present engaged in pursuing his army studies at Woolwich. After some years' residence in London, the family removed to Windsor, where Mr. Taylor has built for himself a charming house from his own design. The gardens slope down to the river's bank, and the general aspect of his pleasant domicile is one of comfort, rest, and peace. He finds it a great benefit to sleep in the country after his exacting teaching work in London. Every morning during term time he is in the train at 8.30 or 9 for London. He teaches seven or eight hours every day in the week, and even in the Easter holidays he is busily engaged in examining for the Associated Board, as well as for the Associateship of the Royal College of Music. Like all public men he finds that his correspondence makes a very serious demand upon his time. A Bachelor of Music will write, asking him how he (the Bachelor) should finger a certain arpeggio passage; and a lady enquires whether she would be allowed to take a notebook into the examination-room for the Associateship of the Royal College of Music: "It would save time," she naïvely remarks! A former hobby of Mr. Taylor's was photography, from the days of the wet plate onward. For some years he took many photographs during his summer holidays. These he would show on the screen to his friends on his birthday as each February came round—giving, in fact, a magic-lantern exhibition with an explanatory lecture.

This biographical sketch of one of our foremost pianoforte teachers may fitly close with the following "appreciation" by Sir George Grove. The Editor of the well-known Dictionary says of his old protégé, Franklin Taylor: "His attention to his pupils is unremitting, and his power of imparting tone, touch, and execution to them, remarkable. Gifted with a fine musical organisation himself, he evokes the intelligence of his pupils, and succeeds in making them musicians as well as mere fine technical performers."

ROMANTICISM IN MUSIC.

By Professor Niecks.

Romance, romantic, romanticism — what charming ideas, what delightful impressions, are called up by these words in the minds of most of us! They breathe upon us and surround us like exquisite perfumes. But what is romanticism? We seem to know, and yet seem to be unable to give an account of what we know. On going in search of help to dictionaries and books on art and literature, we discover, to our surprise, that they do not afford the ready information we expected. If we compare the definitions given there, we are bewildered by their variety; and if we examine them singly, we soon perceive their inadequacy. However, let us try whether, in spite of these discouraging conditions, it is not possible to form a comprehensive notion of the thing we wish to study.

Romanticism, in the original application of the word, means what is peculiar to the Middle Ages, in contradistinction to what is peculiar to Antiquity. The particular word was chosen to bear this meaning, because the Romantic peoples were the most cultured and played the principal parts in the art and literature of those times. Madame de Staël, who in France first used the word "romantic" in connection with literature, applies it to the second of the great eras of the world, that following the establishment of Christianity, applying the word "classic" to the first era, that preceding the establishment of Christianity. A recent writer, Henry A. Beers, in "A History of English Romanticism in the Eighteenth Century," finds the central point of romanticism in "the reproduction in modern art or literature of the life and thought of the Middle Ages." The difference between the classic and the romantic, between the antique and the mediæval, may perhaps briefly be indicated thus. In Antiquity, body and soul maintained a steady equilibrium; in the Middle Ages, the soul outbalanced the body. Again, in antiquity, sanity, sobriety, lucidity, and orderliness reigned supreme; in the Middle Ages, a morbid spirituality, a love of the marvellous, and a delight in the vague, involved, and fantastical prevailed. Goethe went so far as to say, without circumlocution or qualification: "The classic I call the healthy, the romantic the diseased." At any rate, it was the Middle Ages that developed the form of Christianity we know by the name of Roman Catholicism, with its worship of saints, and, above all, that of the Blessed Virgin Mary; it was in the Middle Ages that mysticism flourished more luxuriantly than in any other age; and, lastly, it was the Middle Ages that gave birth to chivalry and to the "lady's service," the worship of woman, the new love.

Now, what has so far been stated by me shows us how the word arose, and shows us also something of its meaning; but it does not show us all its meaning, or rather all its meanings. Romanticism is possible with little and even with no mediævalism, indeed, Eichendorff, a thorough romanticist, called for a romanticism that had outgrown the school, laid aside the worn-out mediæval armour, and forgotten mystical transcendentalism and the toying with Catholicism, retaining only the religious view of the world, the spiritual conception of love, and the intimate understanding of nature. Nay, there is in most of our modern romanticism not only little genuine mediævalism, but a great deal of what is absolutely foreign and even antagonistic to it.

Ruskin says, in "The Art of England": "I use the word 'romantic' always in a noble sense; meaning the habit of regarding the external and real world as a singer of Romaunts would have regarded it in the Middle Ages, and as Scott, Byron, and Tennyson have regarded it in our own times." But the same writer says also, in another of his books: "The real and proper use of the word romantic is simply to characterise an improbable or unaccustomed degree of beauty, sublimity, or virtue. For instance, in matters of history, is not the Retreat of the Ten Thousand romantic? Is not the death of Leonidas of the Horatii? On the other hand, you find nothing romantic, though much that is monstrous, in the excesses of Tiberius and Commodus. So again, the battle of Agincourt is romantic, and of Bannockburn, simply because there was an extraordinary display of human virtue in both those battles. And there is no romance in the battles of the last Italian campaign, in which mere feebleness and distrust were on one side, mere physical force on the other. And even in fiction, the opponents of virtue, in order to be romantic, must have sublimity mingled with their vice. It is not the knave, not the ruffian that are romantic, but the giant and the dragon; and these not because they are false, but because they are majestic. So again as to beauty. You feel that armour is romantic because it is a beautiful dress, and you are not used to it. You do not feel there is anything romantic in the paint and shells of a Sandwich Islander, for these are not beautiful."

I shall not stop to criticise this passage of Ruskin's. Although we may disagree with him here and there, we must admit that his explanation points in the right direction. Ruskin summarises, as it were, what has just now been quoted in his definition of "romantic feeling," of which he says that it is "the instinctive delight in, and admiration for sublimity, beauty, and virtue, unusually manifested." Of Walter Pater we have a definition identical in meaning and still more concise and pointed. He says of romance that it consists in "the addition of strangeness to beauty." Let me also note Jean Paul Richter's definition of the romantic—"the beautiful without limitation or the beautiful infinite." In short, we may, I think, comprehensively, succinctly, and distinctly characterise romanticism as follows: It necessarily excludes the commonplace, and necessarily includes the ideal. There is significance in the remark that the antithesis of romanticism is not classicism, but realism. Romanticism, however, includes, besides idealism, mysticism. No genuine romanticism is altogether without it. Hence, be your explanation of romanticism ever so full, there will remain an unexplained inexplicable residue. You cannot define mysticism; you cannot define the infinite and the indefinite.

It is obvious that much is called "romantic" which does not fall under the definitions I have given. The narrowest experience, the most cursory observation demonstrates the contrary. We have so-called romantic works that are purely materialistic, or have strangeness without beauty. These we are justified in refusing to accept as genuinely romantic. But even if the spurious kinds are left out of account, romanticism presents itself in a great variety of forms. To realise this, we have only to think of the German romanticists of the early nineteenth century, the contemporary English romanticists, and the French romanticists of the third, fourth, and fifth decades of the same century. However, it is not enough to note the distinct characteristics of the schools only, the distinct characteristics of the members of the schools also have to be noted. Should the names of the romanticists of other countries speak to you to some extent with an uncertain voice, the names of Wordsworth, Coleridge, Southey, Scott, Byron, Shelley, Keats, and others cannot fail to at once conjure up before you a wonderful diversity in matter and manner. And let us keep in mind also this: as there is much that is not romantic although so called, so there is also much that is romantic although not so called. The romantic schools have not a monopoly of romanticism. Classical form does not exclude romantic matter; and disregard of classical form does not constitute romance. Nevertheless you meet in dictionaries with definitions like this: "'Romantic' is an expression applied to writers who free themselves from the rules of composition and style established by the classical authors." Such a definition does not touch the essence of romanticism at all; although it is of course true that writers who abandoned the ways of the classics have been called romanticists, and that a romanticist will naturally shun formalism.

Now let us turn our attention from romanticism in general to romanticism in music, which Hegel calls the most romantic of the arts. Schumann thought that no school should be singled out as being specially romantic, as all music is so. The philosopher was undoubtedly right; in going beyond him the composer went wrong. Supposing all music to be romantic, there may yet be different degrees of height, depth, and breadth in the romanticism embodied in it. Who can deny or doubt this? The degree depends partly on the character of the composer, partly on the spirit of the age, and partly on the stage of development of the art. An imaginative, enthusiastic, and warm-hearted idealist will produce music very different from that produced by a sober, calculating, matter-of-fact formalist. But before the imaginative, enthusiastic, and warm-hearted idealist can make his art the interpretative medium of his visions and feelings, this art must have attained a sufficiently high degree of expressiveness, and not be under the tyranny of a fashion that fetters that power. There was nothing romantic in the early harmonic music of the tenth, eleventh, twelfth, and thirteenth centuries, when the whole attention of the composer was fixed on experiments in the combination of simultaneous sounds. Again, there was extremely little romance in music whilst in the fifteenth and early sixteenth centuries the highly artificial counterpoint of the Netherlanders flourished. Again, in more recent times, there have been phases of the art in which the possibilities of romance were greatly restricted by the prevailing fugal or insipid harmonic texture, or the mechanical symmetry and petrified conventionality of the formal structure.

But great geniuses vent their romanticism in spite of all obstacles. So did, to some extent at least, the Netherlander Josquin Deprès, in the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries; so did, to a very much larger extent, indeed in a most marvellous manner, the German J. S. Bach, in the first half of the eighteenth century, and so did at other times other musicians that were composers and tone-poets to boot. Romanticism in music did not begin with Berlioz, Chopin, and Schumann. We find it in Schubert, in Weber, and Spohr; in Beethoven, the greatest of the classics, and farther and farther back, even in folk-song and the plain chant of the Church. Mark, I do not say that all folk-songs and all plain chants are romantic; but I do say that here and there we may find in them the idealisation and transfiguration of feeling—the ecstasies of joy and sorrow, the exaltation of hope, longing, and aspiration, the mysticism of the heart; in short, we may here and there find in them "strangeness added to beauty."

Strangely enough, Schumann, one of the most romantic of the romanticists, did not care for the word and used it rarely. He writes in a criticism: "I am heartily tired of the word 'romanticist,' although I have not pronounced it ten times in all my life." His confession of faith as to the romantic he gives in a letter to his beloved Clara, where he says: "The romantic does not lie in the figures and forms; it cannot fail to present itself if the composer is but a poet." In other words, Schumann holds that the romantic and the truly poetic are synonymous. Here we have a great truth. The best and highest in art and literature, that which deeply moves and enraptures us is always romantic. Be the excellences present ever so great and many, wherever romance is absent, the bloom and flower and fragrance are lacking. The significance of Schumann's remark is brought out more fully by the two preceding sentences. In them he tells Clara that in her compositions she likes nothing so well as thunder and lightning, and is always in search of the new and what had never been. But, he adds, there are also old and eternal conditions and moods which dominate us.

As Schumann's views of romanticism must interest us—must interest us, for one reason, because he was a great composer and romanticist himself—I shall quote some of his opinions. They may serve as a first introduction to some of the innumerable kinds of romanticism. In his enthusiastic article on Schubert's delightful C major Symphony, he speaks of its "bright, blooming romantic life." A report of a concert given by Moscheles contains the following utterances: "Formerly Moscheles bubbled over with youth, now he follows darker, more mysterious paths, unconcerned whether it pleases the many. . . . But the romantic vein which runs through his new compositions is not a romanticism which, as in Chopin, Berlioz, and others, is far in advance of the culture of the present, but one which turns backward, a romanticism of antiquity, as it looks upon us from the Gothic works of Bach, Handel, and Gluck. Indeed, in this his creations resemble some of Mendelssohn's, who, however, still writes in the vigour of his first youth." In the course of a criticism of some compositions of Stephen Heller we read: "Heaven be thanked! Our composer knows nothing of those vague nihilistic misdoings in which some seek romanticism, nor of that gross daubing materialism, in which the French neo-romanticists indulge; on the contrary, he feels naturally, and expresses himself cleverly and clearly. Nevertheless one feels that there is something in the background, a peculiar attractive twilight, rather dawn-like, which causes the otherwise firm forms to be seen in a strange shimmer. Anything like this can never be described by words; to describe it by a picture is somewhat less impossible."

Yes, Schumann is right, there are things in music that cannot be described by words, and other things that can only be described with great difficulty. And these things are just the things that distinguish romanticism. Nevertheless an attempt has to be made to characterise, to differentiate, the genres and shades of the romanticism of the most notable romanticists. One could begin with Schumann's predecessors, J. S. Bach, Beethoven, Weber, Spohr, and Schubert; then proceed to his contemporaries—Mendelssohn, Chopin and Berlioz, who were somewhat earlier in the field, and the somewhat later Liszt, Henselt, Stephen Heller, and Wagner; and, finally, settle down to the study of Schumann's romanticism.

In the task of characterisation we shall be greatly aided by a classification of romanticism—for instance, into romanticism of adventure, of the picturesque, and of the mystic; the romanticism of feeling and of the imagination; the romanticism of love, of nature, and of religion; mediæval and modern romanticism, oriental and occidental romanticism, and so on.

MITTENWALD AND ITS FIDDLE-MAKERS.

MONUMENT TO MATTHIAS KLOTZ (1653-1743).

Bavaria is a country that has many sources of attraction for the musically inclined. Most of the English and American pilgrims one meets there have Bayreuth for their object, to which not a few add Munich, with its admirably organised opera-house; some, after the delightful but exhausting occupation of listening to operas, seek refreshment in the Bavarian Alps, at Partenkirchen or Garmisch, and such I would counsel to extend their journey a little farther, to the small town—or large village of Mittenwald. It lies on the left bank of the River Isar, on the coach road between Partenkirchen and Zirl, in the valley of the Inn, the nearest station to Innsbrück. This road, by the way, is one of the finest imaginable, whether as regards engineering or scenery. In great part it dates from Roman times, and it winds among high Alps, that rise abruptly from flat and fragrant meadows, in which the incessant chatter of the grasshoppers serves as a florid counterpoint to the canto firmo of the cow-bells. By rising at an abnormally early hour the whole journey from Partenkirchen to Zirl can easily be accomplished in the day; but the discreet traveller will prefer to dwell over so pleasant an experience, and will take at least a couple of days over the journey. He will most probably break it at Mittenwald, which is a convenient half-way house, just this side of the Austrian frontier. It would be difficult to imagine a quainter or more picturesque little town—it boasts some 1,800 inhabitants—or more magnificently romantic surroundings. With mountains in all directions, and flanked by one (the Karwendel) of imposing outline, the outlook on every side is one of deep impressiveness; the landscape is emphatically on a grand scale.

The town itself is delightfully unspoilt by modernization, and in particular has suffered little from the inroads of the tourist. The houses have the characteristic projecting eaves one associates with mountain districts. These eaves are, if anything, above the average in depth, and give a wonderful dignity to the otherwise unpretending domestic architecture of the place. Another striking feature is the abundance of fresco decorations on the house fronts. They are obviously home-made, for their draughtsmanship is often faulty and their colour almost invariably crude; but they have a genuinely decorative effect, especially when exposure to the atmosphere has toned down their vivid colours. They also afford a key to the simple piety of the people. The Bavarian peasant is by no means ashamed of his religion. His habitual greeting is "Gruss Gott," he covers the exterior of his house with pictures of religious subjects—one of the chief houses in the town has half the Saints in the calendar on its face, together with the Apostles' Creed in the vernacular—and a group of village gossips will cease their chatter at the sound of the Angelus, rise to their feet, and with uncovered heads repeat their evening prayer. There is no unctuous piety in all this, for they are not like the grocer who told his apprentice to "Sand the sugar, and then come to prayers," but are as a class scrupulously honest, abstemious, and industrious.

THE MAIN STREET OF MITTENWALD IN THE BAVARIAN HIGHLANDS.

But it is not so much on these accounts that Mittenwald should have a special interest for readers of The Musical Times, as because of the staple industry of the town, which is the manufacture of musical instruments. Matthias Klotz, a native of Mittenwald, and son of a violin maker there, is the man to whom the beginnings of this still flourishing industry are due. He is said by some to have been a pupil of Stainer, while I have seen it stated by others that he studied under the great Nicolas Amati. He certainly travelled in Italy and visited Cremona before he settled down in Mittenwald, just about the time when Bach and Handel were born. According to a recent writer, "The small town was then in a state of great poverty, but Matthias, taking advantage of the famed pine woods around, in which he found just the material he required, employed numbers of workmen to make cheap violins, which were afterwards hawked round from house to house and sold at extraordinarily low prices. As a rule, each workman made one and only one of the required parts of the instrument, other workmen being employed in putting the parts together into one whole. Mittenwald soon rivalled Markneukirchen in Saxony and Mirecourt in the Vosges in this industry, and the fortune of the town was made. The tone of the instruments is not bad, but the yellow-brown varnish is of poor quality, and the sound-holes are rather small.*

Though Otto styles him "Stainer's best pupil," the quality of Matthias Klotz's fiddles is generally allowed to have been not more than second-rate. According to Hart's book, much of the wood he used was cut at the wrong season, and is consequently worm-eaten. However this may be, the fame of Matthias as a master was surpassed by his son, Sebastian; but none the less have his fellow-craftsmen two hundred years after his time done well to commemorate him by the spirited bronze statue (by Romel) that stands in front of the church, looking down the main street of which a picture accompanies this article. That the industry he established still flourishes is a strong testimony to his work, and how greatly it flourishes finds some indication in the fact that this fine monument has been erected by the Mittenwald Guild of Instrument-makers (Geigenmacher-verein) of to-day. It is pleasant to walk along the streets of the quaint little place, and to see every now and again at an open window a craftsman who is fitting the neck of a violin, or varnishing a zither, or putting together the parts of a guitar. According to some accounts, Mittenwald is not altogether free from the suspicion of the manufacture of spurious antiques; but it is hard to credit these reports when one comes under the genius loci. The little town is not only beautiful, it is a clean, wholesome, and industrious place, where one feels inclined to linger much longer than the day, or it may be the few hours, one allots to it in the course of a continental tour.

I shall not, I trust, be suspected of being in league with the landlady of the chief inn in the place, "Zur Post" (the large house on the left in the street view), if I add that this ancient hostelry, which must date from the Middle Ages, is not its least attraction. It has ample staircases, intricate corridors, stone-vaulted passages in abundance; but its most charming feature is a little garden, three of the four sides of which are surrounded by a sort of cloister. The walls of this cloister are covered with paintings, mostly landscapes and scenes of village life à la Teniers; but on one wall is a series of most spirited drawings in monochrome of the wild beasts and birds of the Alps, the deer, chamois, bears, eagles, owls, and the like, by the famous German animal painter, Meyerheim.

But all this has a suspicion of Bædeker, to whom the reader desirous of further information may safely be referred. I will only add that, if he should find his way to Mittenwald on his next summer holiday, I think he will admit that I deserve his thanks for putting him on the track of so delightful a spot.

SOME RECOLLECTIONS.

XII.—Ferdinand Hiller.

I began to feel a strong personal interest in this, at one time, very conspicuous musician on the 13th day of March, 1871. It may be asked what enables me to fix so precise a date for the start into being of an emotion. The answer is easy. At the time named Dr. Hiller, then on a visit to London, gave a concert of chamber music in Hanover Square Rooms, having as his chief colleagues in performance Clara Schumann, Joseph Joachim, and Alfredo Piatti. Hiller probably thought that so brilliant a combination of talent would bring about a rush to the ticket office and secure a record attendance. The actual result was something very different. A mere handful of people gathered in the famous old concert-room. The mass cared nothing for two celebrated pianists, the leading violinist, and the first of 'cellists. But we must not look across the intervening twenty-eight years and recklessly throw words of scorn at an unresponsive public. Hiller made up a programme exclusively from his own works, and English amateurs of that day, much more than their present successors, shied at a novelty as a badly broken horse starts at a piece of paper in the road. The public knew nothing of Hiller's Suite de Pièces (Op. 118), or of his "Operetta without words," for four hands on one pianoforte. And they did not go to hear them, despite the fame of the executants. Now, of course, such artists would draw a crowd whatever the theme of their discourse. All the same it was hard upon the pianist-composer, and I sympathised with him in his discomfiture — sympathised even unto hot indignation. It may be bad form for a man to quote himself, but I will risk it. Writing in a morning paper I said: "The scant attendance was a disagreeable fact for those who talk largely of English art-progress. . . . Are, then, the pessimists right, and is there no such thing among us, in any appreciable degree, as a genuine love of high-class music? We are sometimes told that when classical works do succeed in England, it is only because steady persistence in playing them creates an idea that they are succeeding, which, in turn, suggests the desirableness of 'swimming with the tide.' About the truth of this we offer no opinion, but to see a concert like Dr. Hiller's given to a beggarly account of empty benches is to be reminded of the observation." From that time, in my small way, I did what I could for Hiller and such of his works as appeared to me deserving.

* C. Stainer: "A Dictionary of Violin Makers," p. 52.

For some reason or other the Cologne musician never got on well in this country. But it was characteristic of him that, with first-rate ability, and knowledge of his art such as very few acquire, he was never able, even in his own land, to thrust himself into the first rank. Yet the greatest German masters of his time admired and praised his works. Mendelssohn, as many letters show, acknowledged his distinction, and Schumann made no secret of very cordial appreciation. Yet most of the music to which such men paid homage is now as dead as the dodo. At long intervals one hears a solitary example of his best work; the rest, at all events for the most part, is silence. Hiller, though his works are sometimes "dry," betraying more effort than inspiration, was by no means a rigid conservative in art. Schumann saw in him leanings towards the future, and Fétis remarked a fondness for innovation. But this made no difference in the result. He was not quite great enough for fame, and too great for the sort of popularity which is profitable. Like the planet Mercury, he revolved near the sun and was lost in its light; while others, much farther off, caught men's eyes. Nevertheless Hiller did not despair; and though, in London, his name was hardly one to conjure with, he came here to try its effect from time to time, giving recitals in Hanover Square Rooms, where he was aided, on more than one occasion, by Clara Schumann. At some of these he displayed his powers as an improvisor at the pianoforte. That was occasionally done in Hiller's time, but the practice has fallen into disuse, not, I should say, through lack of fancy or skill, but because pianists, whose whole time is taken up in acquiring modern "virtuosity," are hardly so well grounded in music as were their predecessors. It was Hiller's custom to announce beforehand that he would improvise on themes handed up to him by the audience, and sometimes half-a-dozen subjects would be spread out before him. His treatment of them was always remarkable, often wonderful. He would take, not one theme, but two, and even three, weaving them into a fabric so ingenious that it seemed the result of mature reflection rather than an achievement on the spur of the moment. If the subject were adapted for contrapuntal treatment, a fughetta would now and then vary the exercise; but Hiller's greatest strength lay in combining the most diverse melodies into a harmonious whole by means of what I may call astounding rhythmical jugglery. He was the last of the public improvisors of high rank, and all that has been accomplished since his day, as far as I know it, amounts to nothing in comparison. Mendelssohn, it may be remembered, had the same remarkable power of almost instinctive development and combination—a fact to which Hiller, in some of his writings, bears admiring witness.

I first made acquaintance with Hiller on the occasion of a visit paid by him to J. W. Davison. For some years I was in the habit of spending two afternoons of each week in Davison's rooms at 36, Tavistock Place. During that time we were supposed to edit the Musical World, and, as a matter of fact, something in the nature of editing accomplished itself. But the operation was fitful, and carried on more or less in the intervals between pianoforte duets, or bouts of gossip or discussion. Often, too, there were visitors, cronies of Davison's for the most part, others finding admission difficult, and then the stream of talk ran high, swamping the Musical World, save in so far as I stuck to my task, and performed the difficult feat of listening to one thing while writing about another. How many eminent musical people have I seen in my old friend's paper-littered room! and how I used to enjoy their inquisitive glances towards the quiet man who, at the editorial table, went silently and steadily on with his work! Shirley Brooks, who had a favourable opinion of his own conversational powers, could not understand my apparent detachment from his witticisms, and, one day, entering the room when I was not there, he exclaimed, "Why, Jim, where's your paper-weight?" Never mind. It was good in such company to be all ears and no tongue. But I am wandering from Ferdinand Hiller, and return to him by observing that he never visited London without calling upon the powerful critic of The Times, who, moreover, was a friend of many years standing. The two men had a bond of union made up of various strands, such as common admiration, and delightful recollections of Mendelssohn; general agreement regarding the musical movements of the time, the essentials of legitimate pianoforte playing, and so on. Both Hiller and his friend would, by the hour, compare their experience of Paris and eminent Parisians, vying with each other in stories of Rossini, Auber, Berlioz, and many more. To hear all this the silent man at the table, like Desdemona, "did incline," much, I fear, to the detriment of the Musical World. But how could I close my ears against two such Ancient Mariners?

After some time I found myself in a certain sort admitted to the friendship of Hiller, and received from him an invitation to attend a Festival of the Lower Rhine, then appointed to be holden at Cologne, under his direction. I accepted, and found the master very busy and very cordial. It was my first German festival, and he was anxious that I should carry away as favourable an impression as possible. But courtesy did not spontaneously extend as far as free tickets. Accustomed to liberal treatment of press representatives in England, I had fondly imagined that the doors of the concert-hall would open at my approach, almost of themselves. They did not, and, if I rightly remember, a complimentary pass was not forthcoming till after I had made a representation to Hiller on the subject. I am not going to describe the festival, nor could I do so without reference, inasmuch as my surviving impressions of it as a musical display are limited to Handel's "Joshua" and the "Choral" Symphony. The conductor was, of course, very much in evidence on the lofty perch assigned to him. At the "artists' concert" which wound up the proceedings he found that commanding structure prettily decorated with flowers and greenery, from amid which his squat, stout, prosaic figure looked out with something of incongruity in effect. When all was over, the chorus rained blossoms upon their chief till it seemed likely that he would be buried in them. It was all very pretty, very cordial, and imbued with the sentiment which is so strong an element in Germanic human nature. I am far from sure that Hiller did not weep—that I did not see him, like the soldier in the ballad, wipe away a tear. That evening, chorus and orchestra sat down to a truly German supper under the presidency of Hiller, who had very courteously invited myself and my travelling companion to share the meal. For some reason or other, of which I have now no very decided recollection, we were late in presenting ourselves. To the best of my belief we could not find the place of hospitality; anyhow, when exploring a certain street I heard my name called from a passing cab. The voice was that of Joseph Joachim, and the person of the great violinist was on its way to our hotel, intent to discover what had become of us. Jumping into the cab we were soon in the supper-room, to which, indeed, we might easily have been guided by the clatter of several hundred German voices belonging to as many elated men and women. Throughout the protracted meal Ferdinand Hiller was seen at his best. Always a good raconteur, always witty and, just then, brimming with high spirits, the veteran kept the tables in a roar. He was not the only speaker, alack! Everybody desired to be heard. The occasion was a virulent outbreak of speech-madness, which manifested itself in instalments between the courses. But nobody seemed to weary. The company took food and speech in alternate layers, while the face of the president beamed "Bless you, my children!"

I remember that some arrangements of the feast struck me as peculiar, apart from the tantalising procedure of making speeches after one dish and before the next. Though familiar with eating in Germany, at the Rhineland hotels for example, I was then innocent of knowledge on the point of German eating, and because of this ignorance I expected, after the first course, that my plate would be changed and, with it, my knife and fork. But, as it turned out, that was not at all an order of the evening. The plate that had served for one dish was considered good enough for the next, and for all. What mattered a confusion of flavours? I watched the result with much interest and, let it be confessed, with a repugnance which my fellow-guests would possibly have denounced as "insular" had I declared it. Those to the manner born made their platter as clean as they could, and passed the knives through a piece of bread before again putting them in their mouths. There was nothing to do but follow the example, and accumulate beside my plate a row of pieces of bread more or less coloured by the prevailing hue of the viands. It is all a matter of custom, of course, and certainly the appetite of my neighbours did not appear to suffer in the least from primitive usages. A jolly evening thus crowned the festival, and when the convives trooped homeward through the quiet streets many who had not shared were probably aware of it.

The next morning I called at Hiller's house to bid him farewell, and found him suffering from very natural reaction. In déshabillé and an easy chair, the veteran seemed disposed to rest and be thankful. But he was quite ready to talk, especially about some works of his which he hoped to have performed in England. I saw Hiller in London once, and I think only once, after the Cologne experience. He died, as the biographers tell us, in 1885, and in him death removed a singularly able man, who only just fell short—unaccountably short—of greatness.

Gratifying tokens frequently reach us that The Musical Times is appreciated. One of the most recent of such pleasant communications comes from an uttermost part of the earth—the North-Easternmost portion of China. The Bishop of Corea, in a letter to Mr. George Riseley, of Bristol, says:—

> "I have just seen a copy of The Musical Times for last February, and cannot resist the temptation of writing a line to you from far-off Manchuria, to add my regrets to the many you must have received at the loss of the fine organ. How well I remember its opening by Best in 1869 (?); I know it was just after the loss of H.M.S. Captain. . . . Well, may success—such success as is good for you—and all happiness attend you always. That notice in The Musical Times has brought back to me the days when we used to sing together as boys."

The Bishop of Corea, the Right Rev. Charles John Corfe, is a son of the late Dr. Corfe, organist of Christ Church Cathedral, Oxford. He was formerly an assistant-master of St. Michael's College, Tenbury, in Sir Frederick Ouseley's time.

The Philharmonic Society is hastening on to its centenary. The question may be, and, in fact, often is asked: "Are the constitution and administration of the Society up to date? In other words, are they in accordance with the democratic spirit of the age?" The Society is governed by seven Directors, who are elected by ballot from the Members, who are elected from the male Associates. Whilst the number of Members cannot exceed sixty, no limitation is placed upon the roll of male Associates; but the female Associates—to adopt their official definition—like the Members, are limited to sixty, and they are not eligible for the Membership. From the last available published document of the Society (the programme-book of June 15, 1899) it appears that there are fifty-nine Members (eleven of whom are of foreign birth), ninety-seven male Associates, and sixty female Associates, who together constitute the professional side of the Society. But the only section, beyond the Directorate, that has any voice (and that probably of the whisper quantity) in the management of the Society's affairs, or is given the opportunity of coming into touch with its administration, is that of the Members. And upon what principle are the Members elected from the ranks of the Associates? Certainly not by reason of seniority, as five Associates are aged respectively 87, 80, 76, 74, and 64—three of these gentlemen, including a University Professor, being well known and active musicians. Without in the least degree desiring to magnify the position of the Associates, would it not conduce towards the welfare of the Society if, instead of their being practically outcasts (the casting into the treasury of subscriptions excepted), they were brought more into touch with the powers that be? Might not the Membership be extended, even if it is thought desirable to retain the upper and lower grades? With the best interests of the Society warmly at heart, our point is this: the more widespread the interest, the less likely is the Society to become fossilized and suffer from senile decay. One thing more. The Philharmonic Society is a public institution, therefore should not the Society's accounts be made public? They need not be given in minute detail; but a properly audited balance-sheet, showing profit and loss, and supplying main divisions of income and expenditure, would probably go to disprove many wild statements that sometimes get into circulation anent the veteran Society.

The Brighton Sacred Harmonic Society recently gave a very successful performance of Mendelssohn's "Elijah," under the able direction of Mr. Robert Taylor, who has held the conductorship of the Society for twenty-nine years. A local criticism of the performance contained one or two choice specimens. Here they are. "In London, and one or two other centres, the popularity of 'Elijah' is being overtaken by that of 'St Paul.'" Really! this is news indeed. Again: "No one would ask tenderer renderings of 'If with all your hearts' and 'He that shall endure to the end' than he gave us." The italics are not in the notice, but their insertion here needs no comment, beyond that they refer to the tenor soloist. Once more: "He [the bass soloist this time] was greatly applauded after 'Is not His word' and the equally stirring 'For the mountains.'" O hills, O vales of musical criticism! With all its frequent dulnesses it is seldom brightened up thuswise. But such perversions are not the peculiar prerogative of poor provincial pressmen. In describing a Society wedding last month, a big London daily reported this fact: "While the bridal party were in the vestry, the beautiful anthem from Mendelssohn's 'Elijah,' 'If with all your hearts,' was most effectively sung by the excellent choir." It is to be hoped, most excellent scribe, that the familiar air will be allowed to pursue the even tenor of its way without being molested by the deranger.

Sir Frederick Bridge discoursed on the subject of "Henry Smart's Organ Music" at one of his recent Gresham lectures. In one of those amusing asides so eminently characteristic of his public utterances, the Gresham Professor of Music introduced an interesting autobiographical anecdote. This aside, which had reference to an incident in Sir Frederick's early career, we have been able to amplify by a little research amongst some old newspapers at the British Museum. Here is the narrative. In the year 1865 "young Mr. Bridge, of Rochester," then aged twenty, was a candidate for the organistship of St. Luke's Church, Old Street, in succession to Henry Smart, whose full name, by the way, was Henry Thomas Smart. The salary was £30, plus "£20 from church funds, and certain other payments made by the schools; and for these several sums [the aggregate of the emoluments was not stated] the person appointed would be expected to attend all the services of the church and to instruct the school children in the choral service and psalmody."

Fourteen candidates entered for the competition, at which Dr. (then Mr.) E. J. Hopkins was the umpire. The tests were as follows:—

1. The "Old 100th," from memory, with interlude.
2. A chant, as if accompanying the Venite, from memory.
3. Psalm-tune to harmonize, melody alone given.
4. Psalm-tune to harmonize, figured bass given.
5. Organ voluntary, own choice.

Mr. Adjudicator Hopkins "returned" four of the competitors, "Mr." Bridge being the last of the quartet elect. But the competition was mere child's play compared with the procedure of the second and final stage of the business. As the actual appointment was in the hands of the Vestry of the parish, each one of that chosen few, that glorious band of selected organists, had to canvass the personnel of that parochial electorate. This canvassing expedition necessitated visits to certain public-houses in the neighbourhood of Goswell Road on the part of the young man from Rochester, not, be it observed, for the purpose of quenching his thirst, but in order to satisfy his hunger for various vestrymen's votes.

At the Vestry meeting the merits and demerits of the four aspirants to the St. Luke's keyboard were freely discussed. Then spake Mr. Churchwarden Dale, who said that "the one lowest on the list was really a first-rate, spirited young man, and he was therefore determined to support Mr. Bridge, who came from Rochester Cathedral." Does not Mr. Churchwarden Dale's opinion of his "spirited" protégé of thirty-five years ago hold good to-day? The result of the poll was that the successful candidate received 23 votes; while Mr. Bridge, "the lowest on the list," secured 16; the other two men obtained only 4 and 3 votes respectively. One of the selected four was an amateur; but of the three remaining professional men who were "returned" on that occasion, two (including the gentleman who "got in") have joined the majority, while the canvasser of the publicans' votes down Goswell Road way is now organist of Westminster Abbey. Apart from this interesting sequel, the incident furnishes an insight into how organ appointments in London parish churches used to be made. Moreover, it may help to encourage some of the young men of the present day, who, in the bitterness of disappointment, cannot foresee the sweets of success that may be awaiting them in the future. Sir Frederick Bridge's failure at St. Luke's, not the only one of its kind, be it recorded, gives added force to the mottoes Nil desperandum and Perseverantia omnia vincit.

One of the stipulations of the competition at St. Luke's, in 1865, was that "ladies are not eligible." Yet at that time there were at least twelve organ appointments in London city churches held by ladies. Amongst these lady organists were the late Mrs. F. A. Bridge (Miss Elizabeth Stirling), the late Miss Eliza Wesley, the late Mrs. Mounsey-Bartholomew, and Miss Elizabeth Mounsey, who was organist of St. Peter's, Cornhill, for the long period of forty-eight years—from 1834 to 1882.

An interesting link with the musical past of London has been severed by the demise, on the 14th ult., of Mr. Gotthilf Henry Heinke, who died in the same house in which he was born seventy-nine years ago, No. 79, Great Portland Street. It was in this house—formerly No. 103, and standing at the North-Eastern corner of Ridinghouse Street, opposite the side entrance to Queen's Hall—that Mendelssohn lodged during his first visit to London in 1829, his second visit in 1832, and again, on two separate occasions, in 1833. Here he wrote his song "The Garland" ("By Celia's arbour"), to Thomas Moore's words. The autograph MS. is dated: "London, 24 May, 1829"—the Queen's tenth birthday, and a Sunday!

Mendelssohn occupied two rooms on the first floor; his sitting-room had the two windows which look over Great Portland Street, and the side-window which has a Southern outlook towards Oxford Street. The old house, except its business portion, remains exactly as it did seventy years ago. But in two or three years it will be demolished and thus share the same fate that has befallen so many buildings of musical interest in London. The late Mr. Heinke loved to chat about those happy days of his boyhood, when he had "lots of fun with Mendelssohn," who used to call him "Henry." "Mendelssohn," the old gentleman would say, "had two grand pianos in the room upstairs. He was nearly always practising, and (adopting a confidential tone of voice) he used to play on a little dumb keyboard—just a few keys—while he was sitting up in bed: I've seen him! My mother was a capital cook and she used to make very nice bread-and-butter puddings. Mendelssohn was so fond of them that he asked that a supply of cold pudding should always be kept in the cupboard in his sitting-room so that he could help himself when he returned home from a late concert, or a dinner-party! I remember how amused he was when he lifted the cup that supports a pie-crust and the juice of the fruit bubbled out—it was a new experience to him, and it rather tickled his fancy. In those days there was a band—called 'The Marylebone Band'—with a big drum that came about here kicking up a rare noise. Perhaps Mendelssohn had just settled down to his morning's practice when those band fellows would begin to blow and bang away. He would then rush out of his room and shout to me from the top of the stairs—with both his hands over his ears—'Henry! Henry! send them away: here is a shilling.'"

A Weber anecdote that Mr. Heinke related was of a more pathetic nature. (It should be stated that Mr. Heinke's father, Mendelssohn's landlord, was an ironmonger; also that in the re-numbering of the street the numbers of the Smart and Heinke houses have become interchanged.) "Early one morning Sir George Smart's manservant, from up the street, came rushing into the shop and breathlessly asked my father if he would send a man at once to break open a bedroom door. All the men had gone to breakfast; so my father caught up a bag of tools and went himself as fast as he could to Sir George's house, which, curiously enough, was then 79, the same number as this house is now. My father forced the door, and thus he was the first to look upon the face of poor Weber as he lay there with his arm under his head, in the long sleep of death."

It may be convenient for the purpose of reference if we give the places and dates of the more important Competitions to be held during the year 1900:—

Isle of Man	March 21 and 22.
Kendal	April 26, 27, and 28.
York	May 1, 2, and 3.
Morecambe	May 9, 10, 11, and 12.

The Westmoreland Musical Festival, the second on our list, is the outcome of the competition of which Miss Wakefield was the founder and honorary conductor. This important music-making, heretofore known as the "Wakefield Competition," has been placed upon a wider footing. A generous subscription has been made in the county and elsewhere towards the funds in order that the committee may be able to provide the first-rate artists and orchestra desired by the honorary conductor, and to meet other expenses which are necessary to ensure a successful Festival. The choirs, instead of being divided, some singing on one evening and some on another, are to be united to form a festival chorus of at least 600 voices. This chorus will sing at both the Festival concerts in the works chosen for performance—viz., Dr. Stanford's "Phaudrig Crohoore" and Mr. Coleridge-Taylor's "Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast." In addition to the competition among local choirs, there has now been added, for the first time, an open competition, which it is hoped will attract choirs from the West Riding of Yorkshire, Lancashire, Cumberland, and other well-known centres of choral singing. The arduous duties of adjudicator will be safe in the hands of Dr. McNaught. Mr. Alfred H. Willink, Burneside, Kendal, is the honorary secretary.

The Morecambe Musical Festival and Competition will be honoured by the presence of Sir John Stainer, who, with Dr. W. G. McNaught, will act as an adjudicator. In addition to the usual comprehensive scheme of competitions, which are to occupy four days, Dr. McNaught will give a lecture on "Musical Competitions," and conduct a children's concert, at which Luard Selby's humorous cantata "The Waits of Bremen" will be the feature. Sir Hubert Parry's "Blest Pair of Sirens" will be performed at the last concert, when a new madrigal, "Room, room, for Flora's Queen," by Sir John Stainer, is announced to be sung, under the direction of the composer. The secretary is Mr. H. Powell, 6, Skipton Street, Morecambe. The prospectuses of both these competitions are very interesting and admirably compiled documents, and there can be no doubt that such well-organized functions must exercise a beneficent influence upon musical education in the districts in which they are held. They deserve every encouragement and support from all well-wishers to the cause of music in this country.

Mr. Andrew W. Tuer has just published a delightful series of "Stories from old-fashioned Children's Books," which furnish many quaint and interesting glimpses of the habits of our grandfathers. Views current a century ago on the practice of the art of music are amusingly illustrated in a quotation from a book, entitled "Newbery's Familiar Letter Writer, adapted to the capacities of Young People. London: Printed for E. Newbery, the Corner of St. Paul's Churchyard. 1788." It takes the form of a "Letter to a young Man, on his too strong attachment to Singing and Music." It will be noticed that a distinction is here made which one still sees occasionally in prospectuses of fifth-rate schools or music teachers. The epistolary admonition—a mere dipping into this book irresistibly inclines us to affect the Johnsonese style—is as follows:—

> "Dear Cousin,
> "In the first place, my dear cousin, these pleasures of sound may take you off from the more desirable ones of sense, and make your delights stop at the ear, which should go deeper, and be placed in the understanding; for, whenever a good singer is in company, adieu to all conversation of an improving or intellectual nature. In the second place, it may expose you to company, and that perhaps not the best or most eligible. Hence your business and your other more useful studies may be greatly, if not wholly neglected, and very possibly your health itself be impaired. In the third place, it may tend, which it naturally does, to enervate the mind, and make you haunt musical societies, operas, and concerts; and what glory is it to a gentleman, even if he were even a fine performer, that he can strike a string, touch a key, or sing a song, with the grace and command of an hired musician?"

It is satisfactory to realise the progress we have made in one hundred and eleven years. Now, so far from disdaining to "strike a string," not a few of the "hupper suckles" can play the banjo with considerable efficiency, while in society gatherings every hostess knows that, if songs do somewhat impede "conversation of an improving or intellectual nature," this may easily be stimulated by the discreet introduction of a little instrumental music.

Dr. Henry Watson, of Manchester, has for many years been a diligent collector of valuable musical works published during the last four centuries and of the instruments of all lands. The fine library which he has generously presented to the city of Manchester is rich in celebrated treatises, showing the state of musical knowledge at various epochs. Moreover, it contains, in addition, complete collections of the scores of all the great masters, from Handel and Bach onward. Among the works are many intensely interesting to the historically-minded student. The gift which Dr. Watson now makes is worthy of the city's grateful acceptance, and will, it is expected, form the nucleus of a collection as useful to young musicians as is the splendid reference library to students of all scientific, historic, or artistic subjects.

Congratulations to our excellent contemporary Notes and Queries upon the attainment of its jubilee. This useful "medium of intercommunication" was started on November 3, 1849, therefore the issue of the 4th ult. is rightly designated a "jubilee number." It contains an admirably written history of the periodical, with highly interesting biographies of its three former editors, contributed by the publisher, Mr. John C. Francis. The third editor of Notes and Queries was Henry Frederick Turle, the fourth surviving son of James Turle, organist of Westminster Abbey. We learn that "during his short editorship of Notes and Queries (1878 to 1883) Mr. Turle devoted all his energies to its welfare. Nothing in connection with his work was too much trouble for him; he regarded the paper with an enthusiastic affection. . . . His kindly nature had endeared him to all." Mr. Turle died, very suddenly, on the first anniversary of his father's death. On the previous day he had visited the grave at Norwood Cemetery and placed thereupon some flowers in anticipation of the visit of his sisters upon the following commemorative day. Little did he think that he would be so soon laid to rest with his distinguished father. Notes and Queries has naturally contained many musical "intercommunications" during the half-century of its existence. Amongst former contributors were the late William Chappell and Dr. E. F. Rimbault; the names of Mr. W. H. Cummings, Mr. Julian Marshall, and other musical antiquaries are frequently to be met with in recent years. Mention should be made of a valuable "organ bibliography" which appeared during the year 1890. The jubilee number contains, as a special supplement, portraits of the first proprietor, Mr. Charles Wentworth Dilke, and of its founder and earliest editor, Mr. William J. Thoms. Underneath the latter are the following amusing lines, reproduced in fac-simile:—

He coined the word Folk-Lore,
And started Notes and Queries.
William J. Thoms.

The following services and recitals have been arranged in connection with the re-opening of the Norwich Cathedral organ during the present month. On the 12th inst., at 2.30, there will be full Evensong, when the choirs of Ely Cathedral and King's College, Cambridge, united with the Norwich Cathedral choir, will sing the following: Magnificat and Nunc dimittis, Mann in A flat (for double choir); "Ascribe unto the Lord" (Wesley); and Stanford's Te Deum in B flat. Dr. Mann, a former chorister of the Cathedral, now organist of King's College, Cambridge, will preside at the organ; conductor, Dr. Bates, the Cathedral organist. At the close of the Service, Dr. Peace, organist to the Liverpool Corporation, will give an organ recital, and also one at 7.30, when Beethoven's "Hallelujah" Chorus is to be sung by the Cathedral choir, augmented by choirs from several of the Parish Churches in the city. Sir George Martin's unaccompanied Anthem, "Holiest, breathe," will be sung by the Cathedral choir only. Dr. Allen, of Ely, is to be at the organ. Dr. Bates will, as in the afternoon, conduct. On Wednesday, the 13th inst., Mr. E. H. Lemare, organist of St. Margaret's, Westminster, will give recitals at 3 p.m. and 7.30 p.m., and, on the following Sunday, short recitals will be given by Dr. Bates after the afternoon and evening Services. Recitals are also announced during the week beginning December 17 by Mr. William Stevenson Hoyte, organist of All Saints' Church, Margaret Street, London, and Mr. C. W. Perkins, organist of the Birmingham Town Hall. Dr. Bunnett, Corporation Organist and an old Norwich Cathedral chorister, will give a recital early in January.

Stourbridge, a town in the Black Country, famous for the manufacture of fire-bricks, iron, nails, and such hardnesses, seems to be unusually enterprising in matters musical. The "concert scheme" for the current season of the "People's Concert Society," conducted by Mr. George Halford, includes such works as Brahms's "Song of Destiny," Stanford's "Phaudrig Crohoore," Parry's "Ode to St. Cecilia's Day," Schumann's "Paradise and the Peri," Tschaïkowsky's "Casse-Noisette" Suite for orchestra, and that terribly hard nut to crack, Beethoven's Choral Symphony! The last-named work received "a highly creditable rendering" on the 13th ult., according to an account received from a correspondent which appears in another column. At the last census Stourbridge had a population of something under 10,000 inhabitants. It is probably a unique occurrence for a town of that size to give a performance of the "Choral." Such an achievement deserves the fullest publicity and highest commendation.

At the instance of the German Emperor, a new version is being prepared of Weber's "Oberon." Planché's libretto, which certainly will bear revision, is to be completely overhauled by Major Lauff, and new recitatives are to be compiled, from Weberian motivi, by Herr Schlar, the conductor of the Wiesbaden Opera, though there already exist those written by Weber's pupil, the late Julius Benedict, and by Dr. Wüllner, of Cologne. If it should lead to a general revival of this too much neglected work, lovers of the master will have reason to welcome the new version.

The project of removing the mortal remains of Chopin from Paris to Cracow, which has been on the tapis for some years past, has received a fresh impulse from the recent commemorations of the fiftieth anniversary of the Polish composer's death. Collections, with that object in view, are being made by his compatriots, M. Paderewski having contributed the sum of two thousand florins. It remains to be seen, however, whether France, the scene of Chopin's most inspired artistic activity, and the country of his adoption, will agree to the proposed relinquishment of so precious a charge.

A report has got into circulation to the effect that the British Museum authorities are about to issue "treatises," or "books," on Beethoven and Wagner. We have the best authority for asserting that there is absolutely no truth in the statement. It probably took its origin from a proposed scheme to print and publish all the headings under Beethoven and Wagner in the music catalogue. This will, in due time, be done, but no "treatises" will be issued from Great Russell Street.

It is always interesting to hear of the success attending the sons of musicians. The son of Dr. Henry Coward, of Sheffield, has just gained a Mathematical Scholarship at Caius College, Cambridge, of the value of £60 per annum. If the young man only turns out as good a mathematician as his father is a chorus-master, he has every chance of becoming a Senior Wrangler. May all success attend him.

Sir Arthur Sullivan has resigned the conductorship of the Leeds Musical Festival, which he has held, in succession to the late Sir Michael Costa, since 1880. He has thus conducted seven triennial festivals, the outstanding feature of which is the production of his "Golden Legend," written for the great Yorkshire meeting of 1886. The performance of Bach's great B minor Mass in that memorable year will also rank amongst the highest of Sir Arthur's achievements as a conductor. The appointment of his successor will be awaited with more than usual interest.

Messrs. Breitkopf and Härtel have issued an English version of Dr. S. Jadassohn's treatise on Instrumentation, which has been translated from the German, under the careful supervision of the author, by Mr. Harry P. Wilkins, of Washington, U.S.A.

Professor Ebenezer Prout (Professor of Music at Dublin University) has accepted the Queen Victoria Lectureship at Trinity College (London) for the present session.

Bach's "Christmas" Oratorio (Parts I. and II.) will be the anthem at the 3 o'clock service at the Temple Church, on Christmas Eve.

M. Emile Sauret will form the subject of the biographical sketch in our next issue.

Wood-wind and strings have whirring chromatic triplet scale passages, against which bassoons, horns, trumpets, and one trombone hurl ff the opening theme from "Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast":—

No. 16. Animato.

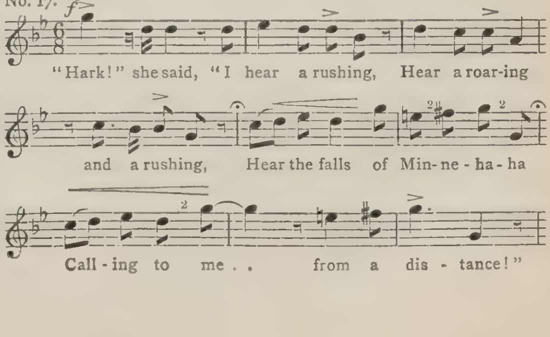
When you ask the young composer what the introduction of this theme at this point might signify, he laughs at you with his merry eyes and says: "Oh! I don't know; I thought it would sound nice." And it will "sound nice"! Genius often works unconsciously, and we have no doubt that Mr. Taylor's spiritual co-worker meant to suggest that poor Minnehaha's feverish brain is busy with the happy time of her early wedded life. The poet's description of her hallucinations—so suggestive of Goethe's "Erl-King"—would have given some "advanced" composers a rare opportunity for indulging in descriptive music of much wanton ugliness and unlovely cacophony. Mr. Taylor, on the other hand, keeps the orchestra in the background and leaves the voice to tell the sad story, e.g.:—

No. 17.



Agitato.
f
"Hark!" she said, "I hear a rushing, Hear a roar-ing and a rushing, Hear the falls of Min-ne-ha-ha
Call-ing to me . . from a dis - tance!"

Note the short pauses 𝄐 suggestive of the feverish gasping for breath, or of moments of agonising suspense, while fearfully listening for imaginary sounds and calls.

The answer, "No, my child, said old Nokomis, 'tis the night wind," &c., is sung by the chorus (S. and A) to the same phrase, but in E flat major and tranquillo. Three times, in more and more agitated accents, does Minnehaha describe the wraiths that affright her disordered brain, Nokomis the while endeavouring to calm her fears with matter-of-fact explanations of the apparitions. Minnehaha's last outcry, con terrore:—

> "Ah!" she said, "the eyes of Pauguk*
> Glare upon me in the darkness;
> I can feel his icy fingers

is followed immediately by a ff scream, "Hiawatha!" uttered twice to a descending diminished seventh from A flat, echoed by oboes and clarinets and afterwards by the full orchestra. The chorus repeats much of what Minnehaha has sung, though, of course, to different words, describing how Hiawatha heard his wife's "cry of anguish, far away amid the forest," and, with crashing chords of the diminished seventh, voices and orchestra repeat again and again with the utmost emphasis the agonised cry of "Hiawatha!" This will prove a very effective and impressive passage.

At last silence reigns for a moment. Then with the "wail," No. 2, richly harmonised, we return to a slower tempo, and, with quieter passages of fresh interest, and forestalling in the orchestra the next quotation (18), we approach an important section, standing in wonderful contrast with what has gone before. Hiawatha has hurried home "empty-handed, heavy-hearted," and hears Nokomis bemoaning Minnehaha's death. The old crone sings a strain of such touching, simple beauty that we are not surprised at the composer's evident liking for it. Here is the theme:—

"Wa - ho-no-min! † Wa - ho-no-min! Would . . that I had perish'd for you, Would that I were dead as you are!
molto rall.
would I were dead as you are! Wa - ho- no -min! &c.

He repeats it first in E minor for baritone solo, as if Hiawatha, standing outside the wigwam, took up the strain, and again for chorus, unaccompanied, as if the Chief's braves and their squaws joined in the lamentation. This is a liberty a composer of such music may surely take.

Between the several sections of this short ensemble the orchestra reiterates with strange but suggestive persistence the rhythm of the cry of lamentation, "Wahonomin" (No. 18, first bar).

Hiawatha rushes into the wigwam to see his lovely Minnehaha "lying dead and cold before him" (theme 4 b), and as he utters "such a cry of anguish that the very stars in heaven shook and trembled!" we have another stirring climax, in which the full powers of chorus and orchestra are employed.

Then the soprano soloist describes how Hiawatha sat down, still and speechless, as in a swoon—

> On the bed of Minnehaha,
> At the feet of Laughing Water,
> At those willing feet, that never
> More would lightly run to meet him,
> Never more would lightly follow.

The vocal phrases are so spontaneous, so pure and affecting in their simple expression of deep sorrow and great compassion, that our heart seems to go out to poor Hiawatha. We must quote the opening phrase of the voice-part—

No. 19. Andante con moto.

Then he sat down, still and speech-less, On the bed of Min- ne - ha - ha, At the feet of Laughing
cres.
Wa - ter, At those will - ing feet, that rall.
nev - er More would light -ly run to meet him, &c.

The orchestra has a suave independent accompaniment of great charm, and, the short solo ended, the composer, with the "Wahonomin" theme (No. 18, first bar) four times played below an inverted pedal on A, modulates into D minor, in which solemn key the Finale starts.

The movement is a Moderato, quasi una marcia funebre, and a most impressive funeral march withal. The orchestra has for its chief theme No. 11, and works especially the last six notes thereof. The following extract will give a good idea of the general arrangement—

Then they bu - ried Min - ne - ha - ha;
pp
In the snow a grave they made her, &c.
&c.

The voices sing largely in unison, the orchestration is full and sombre, big drum and cymbals, struck with drumstick, helping to produce a quasi-barbaric effect. The chorus have several impressive themes, such as this—

* i.e., Death.
† "Wahonomin," a cry of lamentation.

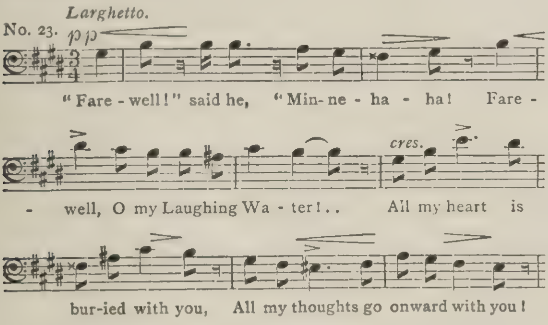
all of which are of course subjected to effective, albeit concise, treatment. At the reference to the fire that was lighted at night on Minnehaha's grave, piccolo and flutes lend a realistic touch to the picture by rapid tremolos in thirds, and mention must be made of the "Wahonomin" theme (No. 18, first bar), entering at the words: "Stood and watched it at the doorway." Nine times in succession chorus in unison and orchestra utter the sad phrase of four notes, on different degrees of the scale and against ever changing harmonies in the rich and solemn accompaniment for brass and drums. The feeling of solemnity and grief, combined with aspiration, which this striking example of Mr. Taylor's powers produces is remarkable.

As the orchestra gradually subsides to ppp, and time and tempo change respectively to 3-4 and Larghetto lamentoso, come al prima, we reach the last solo, Hiawatha's farewell to the dead Minnehaha. The orchestra deals for a few bars with Nos. 1 and 2; then the key changes to E, and Hiawatha utters one of the most pathetic yet dignified strains that has come from the heart of a composer for many a long day. Like the whole work, it is quite simple and natural, merely the out-pouring of a heart overflowing with grief and pity. But how beautiful, how affecting; how pure and true in sentiment! This is the simplicity of genius, that simplicity which, as Felix Weingartner truly says, "will at all times and from every point of view have a happy and stirring effect, and will ever appear new and young."

The solo, which has a very richly harmonised independent accompaniment, is more or less an extension of Nos. 7 and 8, e.g.:—

No. 23.



Larghetto.
pp
"Fare - well!" said he, "Min - ne - ha - ha! Fare -
- well, O my Laughing Wa - ter! . . All my heart is
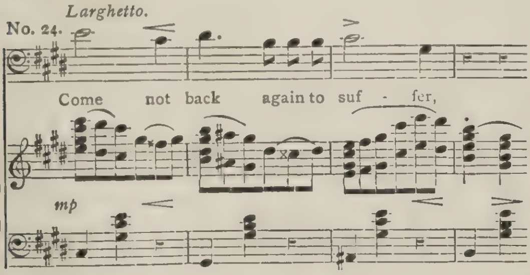
bur-ied with you, All my thoughts go onward with you!

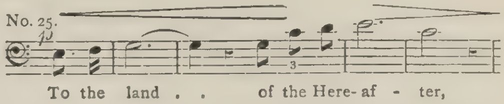
As No. 8 recurs, the orchestra supports the voice with such graceful curves of melody as shown below—

No. 24.



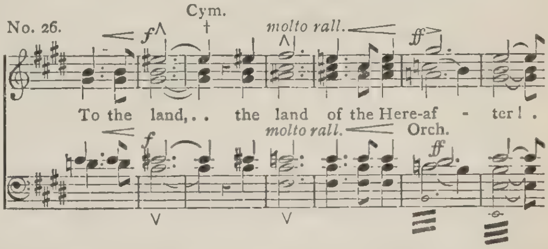
At the reference to the "Islands of the Blessed" to which Hiawatha promises soon to follow his beloved wife, the key suddenly changes to C major, and the orchestra accompanies the voice lightly with tremolos for strings, harp arpeggios, triplet drum taps and horn chords—

No. 25.



The last words, "To the land of the Hereafter," are even more lightly accompanied, and for a good reason: the words should at this important point be understood by everyone in the audience. Wood-wind, horns, and trumpets repeat the last five notes, but soon the solo voice and orchestra (Tutti, including full percussion) plunge back into the brightest E major. The orchestra subsides within the last two bars quickly from ff to pp. Then the chorus repeats, but with numerous and noteworthy variations, what Hiawatha has sung. The part-writing for the voices is remarkably beautiful, and the orchestration of the largely independent and very expressive accompaniment glows with richer and richer colour as the long, broad stream of melody flows slowly onwards. The words, "To the land of the Hereafter," are unaccompanied save for a single clash of the cymbals at the point indicated below. With the word "Hereafter" the orchestra re-enters with the chord of the dominant minor ninth, above which the sopranos sound, with thrilling effect, the bright major thirteenth—

No. 26.



Ten bars of orchestral postlude, original and impressive as everything else in the work, and we reach the end.

SIR HUBERT PARRY ON "THE ESSENTIALS OF CHURCH MUSIC."

A PAPER READ AT THE CHURCH CONGRESS.

In discussing essentials of Church music it must be confessed that a great deal depends upon the point of view. People who have leanings towards Puritanism have always taken different views from such as have leanings in more highly ornamental directions; and if we enter closely into details from any special point of view we should have to discuss deep-seated differences of opinion with regard to the meaning and purpose of Church services. But if we content ourselves with a broad and general view, there is less likelihood of our wasting time on matters of detail which only concern special groups of men. One would like, indeed, to discuss the question altogether from outside—where the predispositions of the various groups who are represented by all sorts of distinctive names are not so likely to disturb the judgment.

Most people who have given any attention to the subject will agree that one of the essentials of any kind of art is fitness for the place and circumstances in which it is to be executed. Even the unthinking and uncritical would see the absurdity of endeavouring to enliven an infant school by reading to them Browning's "Sordello," or playing them excerpts from Brahms's Symphonies or Wagner's "Walküre." Everybody would feel the atrocity of performing music from a comic opera at a funeral, or the Dead March in "Saul" at a wedding. But, partly because they don't think, and partly because they live by uncritical feeling rather than by trained judgment, they do not observe more subtle, but no less decisive anomalies under less obvious conditions. In point of fact the highly sensitive instinct of composers has in the past evolved different styles and methods for all the different kinds of art. And they are all subtly contrived with a view to perfect fitness to the circumstances in which they are to be performed. There would be no meaning in the distinctions between symphonies and oratorio and operatic music and domestic music of all kinds, if composers had not striven to make the special kinds of art perfectly adapted to the conditions in which they are to be presented. The artistic methods and style of symphonies are such as are suitable to performance by orchestras in concert-rooms without the help of scenery or dramatic action. The methods of opera are contrived to fit in with all the accessories of the theatre. The methods and style of the music which is fit to be cherished in our home lives are of the subtler kind which we can afford to be intimate with in detail; the methods of oratorio are such as are suitable to great combinations of chorus and orchestra and soloists, dealing with some typical drama or story, on public occasions. Everyone feels this dimly, and to the thoughtful mind it is clear and inevitable. But, unfortunately, the public is confused, and men allow their discriminating powers to be dulled by mixing up many styles in the same situation.

The habit of transferring artistic works from the situations for which they were intended by the composers to situations for which they were not intended bewilders us all. Excerpts from operas intended to be performed with action and scenery and all the glamour of theatrical excitement are constantly given in concert-rooms. People play arrangements of symphonies on pianofortes without any of the important elements of effect of the orchestration, which represents some of the highest achievements of the composer's skill. And they forget that these proceedings are mere makeshifts and only artistic in a secondary or lower degree. Such things are justifiable as helping towards the knowledge and appreciation of great works in the complete state intended by the composers. Most excerpts from operas, as presented in concert-rooms, are sheer vulgarity, and concessions to the taste of people whose musical sense is deficient; they are only excusable when they suggest vividly the poetic or dramatic incidents they are associated with, as is usually the case with Wagner's operas. But in any case the effect is confusing and leads people to lose sight of the higher perfections of art work, which observe all conditions with the view of obtaining the highest artistic results attainable under the circumstances. Music is the more liable to such confusion of thought because it passes so quickly, and people do not think what it implies. In other kinds of art we are not so easily blinded. We go to Madame Tussaud's and admire the life-like presentation of celebrated characters, and recognise that it is a clever art-work of its kind. And we go to the collections of statuary at the British Museum and recognise that that is art-work of quite another kind. And we realise that if we had the model of a dockful of celebrated criminals placed in the middle of the finest statuary at the Museum the effect would be ineffably ridiculous. But in music we go on mixing things up in such a fashion without the glimmer of a smile or a shudder—and there is hardly any place where you may see more of it than in the music presented in Church services.

It would be absurd to suppose that Church music is not just as strongly identifiable in relation to the circumstances for which it is intended as Chamber music, orchestral concert-music, operatic music, secular vocal part-music or solo song. Indeed, on the face of it Church music seems to demand even more obviously than any other branch the most unmistakable idiosyncracies. It is intended for the most serious moments in men's lives. It purports to be the closest presentation of his reverence, his devotion, his aspiration, his exaltation in praise, his abasement in self-knowledge, and his firmness in hope. It is meant to be presented in surroundings which appeal to the most primeval and mysterious of his instincts, in the place where the ancestors of his race lie in their last sleep, where those before him for generations have joined in the same offices, where sentiment is touched by associations and the ecstasy of wonder. Surely in such surroundings, with the special means of human voices to render the music, there could be no form of art in which the style could be so clearly indicated. In such circumstances concessions to the gallery are hardly to be thought of. It seems almost inconceivable that any traces of vulgarity, insincerity, triviality, sentimentality, sensationalism, sensuousness, or baseness of any kind would be possible.

Some hundreds of years ago composers gave all their minds to the development of the most perfect devotional style—a style as pure and free of base suggestions of any kind as art can possibly be. And England has good reason to glory in those of her musical sons who ministered to so noble and perfectly adapted a form of art. But secular influences invaded the musical department of Church services, and music gave up being devotional, and became everything else a man can think of. Men by degrees grew so confused that composers and performers seem to have aimed at one time chiefly at amusing the congregations. Traces of the earth very earthy crept into the fanes sacred to the ideals of the heavenly, and the moods which the music suggested meant all sorts of strange things which had nothing whatever to do with religious sentiment. Church music style, instead of maintaining its individuality, became a sort of hotch-potch, sometimes savouring of the opera, sometimes of the drawing-room, sometimes of the concert-room, and sometimes more recently of the military brass band and the music hall.

What with arrangements from oratorios and operas, tuneful ditties, and the ineptitudes of complacent mediocrities, people seem to have lost all sense of fitness and all sense of what the music is meant for, and the feelings which it represents. It is bad enough when aspiring amateurs, with no knowledge of grammar or artistic method of any kind, supply their feeble ramblings for the occasions when only the noblest works of art could nearly be adequate. But it is much worse when the object is merely commercial; when the services of the Church are exploited wholesale for mere gathering in of royalties by professional makers of cheap twaddle to assist in the demoralisation of Church musical taste; when the publishers' table is piled high with tons of silly experiments which ignorant and inexperienced dullards, forgetting the seriousness of the conditions, contrive in order to get a little transient personal notice. Almost everything seems to impel men to supply Church music except any adequate sense of the meaning of the words, and the sentiment attaching to the situation. Music seems to be often chosen purely for its effectiveness, without consideration whether the effectiveness is that of the theatre, the music hall, or the domestic fireside. It is often chosen to attract, without consideration whether the congregation attracted comes to be amused or for more appropriate reasons. No doubt it is nice for whoever is responsible to see churches well filled, but it is worth reflecting on what they come for. Mere filling of churches with people who come for a little entertainment or pastime is no better than sowing cornfields with weeds. The very music such congregations hanker after shows what spirit they are of. If they come with full sense of what the conditions implied they would not be satisfied with anything that was not apposite, noble, and pure. Then there would not be such a hankering after the sensuous excerpts from foreign masses. We should not see churches which prided themselves on their music proudly showing, as quite exceptionally virtuous, a list of twenty-three foreign composers who never wrote a note with any sense of the conditions the music was meant for, to twenty English composers who might have attacked the matter from the true artistic and sentimental point of view, but did not, owing to confusion of mind.

Will anyone deny that it is essential to Church music to be lofty and pure and noble? Will anyone say that it is right that it should be enervating, demoralising, artistically bad and imperfect—an offering not even fit for a decent amateur's music room, much less for the associations of the Church? If music must play an ornamental part for those who take an ornamental view of Church services, at least the ornaments should be such as are genuinely appropriate and shall not suggest trivial and second-rate secular associations. To pure devotional music the world will return no more; but a base and ignoble standard need not necessarily be chosen to take its place. The responsibilities of those who order and control the choice of Church music must be faced. To them of all others it ought to be easy to maintain a noble and dignified standard. Everywhere else the forces of the ignorant and the uncultivated seem to have an unavoidable access. But in Church services men can, if they will, do without what is ignoble, and frivolous, and shallow, and base, and stem the tide of degeneration. They can do without arrangements and importations, and have the forms of art which the conditions of the English Church services sufficiently indicate—music which elevates and fills with aspiration; music worthy of the most disinterested moments of men's life, and of their finest emotions; and when such a standard has been arrived at, then, indeed, will the essentials of Church music be found.

A TALK WITH DR. CRESER.

"WELL! how does India look?"

"It depends upon how you look at it! The sun's attentions are perhaps a little too warm; but what an absorbingly interesting country it is in races of mankind, natural beauty, in architecture, and history."

"I suppose you had little to do with the native races."

"True, my work lay with the English speaking people; but it included Brahmins, Parsees, Persians, and others. From the children of these—I must include also the children of English parents—I heard quite artistic pianoforte playing, violin playing, and singing."

"How about the teaching, is it not promiscuous?"

"No, I found it otherwise. The teaching in the Loretto Convents, the Hill Schools, and the Martinière Schools is on the best lines, and, moreover, attention is given to the theoretical as well as to the practical sides of musical education. The teachers are well educated ladies, earnestly doing excellent work. The study of technique is not neglected; far away in the Hill schools one finds excellent instruments and grand pianofortes by the best makers."

"One must use the oil of activity. The railway travelling is comfortable, though not rapid, but uninterrupted both night and day, including Sundays. Each carriage is fitted up with from four to six sleeping couches, which serve as seats in the daytime. Dining cars are now and then available; but, as a rule, the companies arrange to stop the trains at the usual hours for breakfast, lunch, and dinner, and at these appetising breaks in the journey refreshment rooms are to be found. As a matter of fact, one is travelling week in and week out, the only cessation being on examination days. It is here where the rest from travel comes in; additional variety is obtained by riding and pic-nic parties. At sunrise and before sunset is the time par excellence for riding. In the romantic and beautiful Hill station of Naini Tal I have found myself, with a friend, riding up the Hill at sunrise to see the snows. Here on a clear morning one may behold the snow-clad mountains on the distant horizon a hundred miles away. The rarefied air gives one the impression that the snows are but a quarter of the distance, so distinctly are they visible. At Darjeeling, one of the most varied of Hill stations, one might be said to be practically living in the midst of the snows; and the clouds, the sun, and the movement of the clouds form endless transformation scenes."

"I was stationed in Darjeeling at the time it was visited by the cyclone, when the forces of nature devastated everything that came within their reach. The station suffered severely. It is built on a hill of loose shale, which stands between seven and eight thousand feet above the level of the sea. The houses and schools are erected on the sides of the hill, the only level parts are those that have been made by man. Therefore when once the hills begin to slip, everything in their course must come to grief. On this occasion, to make matters worse, the land commenced to slip in the darkness of a storm-stricken night, when people were asleep. The natives and young school children suffered the most. Many brave deeds of rescue were performed by the European lady teachers, together with the aid of a few European gentlemen; but, alas! many young lives were lost in spite of their endeavours. Immediately above the hotel, 'The Woodlands,' where I stayed, a whole native family were buried alive. The hotel itself was partially destroyed, but fortunately no life was lost. Personally I did not suffer, as I was sleeping in another part of the hotel which was untouched. The noted hillside railway track between Darjeeling and Siliguri, connecting Darjeeling with Calcutta, was wrecked, and perforce I was a prisoner in Darjeeling with the dates of my examination days and of the organ recital which I had undertaken to give on the fine Willis organ in Calcutta Cathedral fast passing away. In the meantime I set to work to devise some means of escape. One generous (?) job-master offered to see me through for three hundred rupees! I thanked him most politely and tried other sources. Finally I succeeded in engaging ponies and coolies and a start was made. In the afternoon my small advance party managed to cover three miles and then sent me in a runner with a message that they could get no farther. I was determined to see for myself. At sunrise the following morning I set out riding on a mountain pony attended by two coolies, and, after several minor mishaps, caught up my party; but before we had gone a quarter of a mile we came upon a landslip over which no pony could travel. There was nothing for it but to send the ponies back and proceed on foot. Having improvised alpenstocks cut from the broken branches of uprooted trees, we started to walk along the railway track, which was like the rough bed of a torrent stream; here and there, there was but a small ledge of clay to walk on. On the one side, the hill; on the other, a yawning gulf. Where the bridges were broken we made detours up the hill to meet the stream at a narrower point, and here we scrambled over as best we could. Now and again the natives had placed the trunks of a few trees together, and across these we negotiated several chasms. Nineteen miles of this method of travelling was well nigh enough, and would have been too much had we not found some parts of the line in its normal condition. Finally we arrived safely at the place where the train was able to run down to the plains. Once in the plains I joined the main line, and after crossing the Ganges arrived in Calcutta, being the first European who had arrived there from Darjeeling after the disaster. Once there I set to work on my chief duties in India as examiner in practical music for Trinity College (London), gave my delayed organ recital in the Cathedral, which was crowded to overflowing by a congregation whose liberal contributions benefited to no small extent a deserving local charity."

"Did you have any experience of native music?"

"Yes, and a very interesting one. Having received an introduction to the learned and studious Raja Sir Sourindro Mohun Tagore, I wended my way one afternoon to the native quarter to visit him. On my arrival I was surrounded by sentries, household soldiers in blue uniform, with drawn swords, standing at attention. The Raja received me in an upper corridor and conducted me to his salon, where he had gathered together his musicians with their instruments. Here we conversed without restraint, our chief topic being Hindu music, about which I had many questions to ask. He elucidated certain points in a practical fashion himself on the Indian sitar. We discussed also the tuning, the scales, the srutis, the ragas, and rhythm. The Raja and his musicians are perfect performers. The music played was not solely melodic, as writers on Hindu music would have us believe, but chordal playing accompanied the melodic on the same instrument. After fulfilling a curious polite function, which I carried out to the letter, I departed with my mind in sympathetic accord with what I had seen and heard. I may add the performances were as much superior to the Hindu music one hears in the open air as our chamber music is to our street music, which, of course, is saying a great deal."

CHURCH AND ORGAN MUSIC.

An important musical service was given in Lincoln's Inn Chapel, on the 19th ult., at which Mendelssohn's noble "Hymn of Praise" was sung, under the direction of the much esteemed organist, Dr. Charles Steggall. On the 5th ult. a musical service was held at Brixton Parish Church, which included Beethoven's Fourth Symphony, with Mr. Douglas Redman as conductor. At a special service held in the Islington Presbyterian Church recently, with Mr. H. E. Mackinlay at the organ, selections from Stainer's "The Daughter of Jairus" and Sullivan's "Golden Legend" were given. Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise" was sung at the Parish Church, Portsmouth, on the 5th ult., under the direction of Mr. R. H. Turner.

At St. Peter's, Cranley Gardens, on the 5th ult., Sullivan's imposing Festival Te Deum, first performed at the Crystal Palace in 1872, was given, under the direction of Mr. Herbert Hodge, with the accompaniment of organ, trumpets, trombones, and drums. Smart's Service in B flat was also sung, to the accompaniment of the same instruments.

The Liverpool Church Choir Association begins its preparation presently for the first Festival, the programme of which includes Stanford's Te Deum in B flat, Stainer's Evening Service in the same key, Gounod's "Ave Verum," "O give thanks" (Goss), and other typical specimens of modern Church music. Mr. Branscombe will be the conductor and Dr. A. L. Peace the organist. The Festival will be held in St. George's Hall.

The important musical services which are given in the Church of the Incarnation, New York, under the direction of Mr. W. R. Hedden, have been of exceptional interest during the past month. Service music by many of the best writers of the modern Roman and Anglican schools was sung, and an admirable selection of organ music employed as voluntaries.

Dr. A. L. Peace's recent recitals at St. George's Hall, Liverpool, included his own excellent Sonata da Camera, No. 3 (two movements); a Fantaisie and Fugue in F major by E. Bernard, the organist of St. John and St. Francis, Paris.

Mr. F. G. Ogbourne gave a recital recently at Trinity College (London), when his scheme included Rheinberger's Sonata in F minor (No. 7) and Böellmann's "Suite Gothique." Mr. W. A. Roberts played a selection at St. Paul's, Prince's Park, Liverpool, on the 5th ult., which included King Hall's excellent Offertoire in B flat. At St. Paul's, Hemel Hempstead, Mr. S. A. Mosdell recently played Andante in G, Westbrook, and Fugue in D minor, Steggall.

Mr. E. H. Thorne gave admirable Bach Recitals at St. Anne's, Soho, on the 11th, 18th, and 25th ult. These very interesting programmes include some of the too much neglected choral Preludes, Sonatas, and Variations, in addition to some of the more familiar Preludes and Fugues. Mr. Thorne's admirable recitals are of the greatest value to Bach students. Dr. T. Ely gave two recitals at Christ Church, Scarborough, on the 8th and 18th ult. His programmes included Rheinberger's favourite Sonata in E minor and Smart's typical Air with Variations and Finale Fugato, one of the finest specimens of English organ music.

Mr. T. H. Collinson gave a recital upon the fine concert organ in the McEwan Hall, Edinburgh, built by the Hope-Jones Company. Mr. Collinson gave some classical organ solos, and, with a quartet of trombones, played "Hosannah" (Liszt-Arcadelt) and made a rather new experiment in a rendering of Wagner's "Tannhäuser" Overture for the same combination of instruments. Mr. H. Weston gave four recitals during the past month, when his excellent programmes included Bach's Fantasia and Fugue in G minor, "Capriccio alla Sonata" (Fumagalli), and Concert-Fugue in E minor (Best).

At Wilmslow Parish Church Mr. R. E. Parker lately gave a recital which included a rendering of Boëllmann's "Suite Gothique." At St. Margaret's, Westminster, Mr. E. H. Lemare has, by desire, recently repeated his own excellent Organ Symphony in G minor. Mr. Fountain Meen, on the 16th ult., gave two recitals at the Congregational Church, Harpenden, at the opening of the new organ, built by Mr. H. Wedlake. His programmes included Fantasia and Fugue in A minor (Merkel), Cantilène in A flat (Wolstenholme), and March in D (Silas).

Mr. Roger Ascham's recent recitals at the Feather Market Hall, Port Elizabeth, included Dr. E. J. Hopkins's fine and artistic Allegro Moderato in A, Stewart's Concert-Fantasia, and Hollins's Concert-Overture. Mr. H. J. B. Dart opened the new organ, built by Messrs. Hele and Co. for West Kensington Congregational Church, on the 16th ult. His programme included "Meditation" (Mailly), Choral Song and Fugue (Wesley), and Henry Smart's effective and too much neglected work, "En forme d'Ouverture." At Jesus College, Oxford, on the 17th ult., Dr. Varley Roberts opened the new organ built by Mr. J. J. Binns. During the month of November Mr. H. W. Richards gave a series of recitals on Messrs. Walker's fine organ in Christ Church, Lancaster Gate. His programmes included "Benediction Nuptiale" and "Fantasie" (Saint-Saëns), Romance (R. Steggall), Fantasia and Fugue in G minor (Bach), Rheinberger's Trio for organ, violin, and violoncello, and Toccata (Clarence Lucas). Mr. A. H. Allen's recent programme at St. Clement's Church, Ilford, included a Fantasia of his own, consisting of a Prelude, Intermezzo, and Finale, and Mendelssohn's Sixth Sonata.

Mr. F. R. Frye has been giving a series of recitals at the Parish Church, Chelmsford, before the organ is taken down to give place to a new instrument by Messrs. Norman and Beard. The programme of the last of the series was of marked interest, including Adagio and Allegro (an old English voluntary), (Bennett), Toccata (Purcell), Fantasia on an old English Psalm Tune (Best), &c. Mr. F. Corbett played a selection at St. Peter's Church, Stockton-on-Tees, recently, including in the list of pieces Moderato (Lemare) and Berceuse (Salomé). It is satisfactory to note that English organ music is evidently steadily gaining recognition in the numerous recital programmes which come to hand from month to month.

ROYAL CHORAL SOCIETY.

The season opened on the 9th ult., at the Albert Hall, with one of the most effective performances of "Elijah" given in the Metropolis for many years. Sir Frederick Bridge was deservedly complimented on the improvement in the chorus, which in fulness of tone and general vocal efficiency added proof of artistic intelligence. The words of nearly all the choruses came out distinctly, whilst the dramatic passages were delivered with a breadth and spirit that caused the Baal series and the noble "Thanks be to God" in particular to be heard to more than ordinary advantage. The music of the Prophet was again sung in splendid style by Mr. Santley, and Mr. William Green improved his position in London by a sympathetic rendering of the two tenor airs. Madame Ella Russell and Miss Ada Crossley also sang with their accustomed ability. For the second quartet there were Misses Maggie Purvis and Emily Foxcroft, Messrs. Ager Grover and H. Dearth. Sir F. Bridge had his forces completely under control throughout.

RICHTER CONCERTS.

A Brahms symphony under Hans Richter! O great and all too rare delight, that makest us forgive those of our friends who love not the great Johannes, and even them that will persistently inflict upon our long-suffering good nature the barbarous noises and the unspeakable dulnesses of much unripe bill-poster art à la Tartare. Seriously, Brahms's strong, sane, noble, beautiful music seems a perfect godsend when one has been compelled to listen long to the orgies of blatant Muscovite futilities with which the Queen's Hall resounds on untold afternoons and evenings. It was the Viennese master's great No. 1 in C minor that Dr. Richter played to the delight of a crowded audience at his second concert, at the Queen's Hall, on October 30, and never has he conducted it with happier results. There was a dignity about his reading that caused the music to stand more than ever aloof from all things mundane and common. No nervous excitement was there, no frantic hurrying up to sensational climaxes, no explosion of musical powder magazines, so to speak; but order and strength, beauty and nobility reigned supreme and braced us up after the day's labour instead of merely exciting and irritating us as so much modern music does. It was a great performance of a great work.

The "Egmont" Overture opened the concert, and the remainder of the programme consisted of vocal selections from Wagner's operas—viz., the everlasting "Elizabeth's Greeting," from "Tannhäuser," sung with all requisite enthusiasm by Madame Ella Russell; the great duet from the second act of "The Flying Dutchman," in which the lady was joined, to excellent purpose, by Mr. Louis Fröhlich; the truly delightful "Pogner's Address," and the splendid monologue "Wahn! Wahn!" from "Die Meistersinger." In these latter pieces Mr. Fröhlich sang with remarkable appreciation of the true character of Wagnerian declamation. His voice rang true, his style was broad and dignified, and his enunciation perfect. A remarkable achievement for so young an artist.

At the last concert, on the 6th ult., we heard a noble performance of that wonder amongst symphonies, Beethoven's "Eroica," and a lengthy Wagner selection, superbly played as usual, and hugely enjoyed by a huge audience. The sublime "Trauermarsch," from "Götterdämmerung," was included, and its juxtaposition with Beethoven's "Marcia Funebre" in the Symphony most interesting. How different and yet how equally great and wonderful!

MR. ROBERT NEWMAN'S SYMPHONY AND WAGNER CONCERTS.

At the Tsar's—beg pardon, the Queen's Hall in Langham Place, the sentimental and unhappy hero of the "Pathetic" Symphony has once more been killed with stroke of tam tam and decently buried with much growling of double-basses. The interesting event took place on the afternoon of October 28, and the occasion was the first of Mr. Newman's Symphony concerts. But weep not, gentle reader, he is not really dead; alas! he will come to life again to be scotched and killed many more times ere we have quite done with him. Not that we really object to the gentleman, for we have taken the liveliest interest in his "life and death" ever since he made his appearance (and disappearance) at the Queen's Hall in 1894, under the ægis of kind and sympathetic Sir Alexander Mackenzie. But even you, gentle reader, cannot deny that the toujours perdrix of tam tam suicides (for it is a suicide, of that we are convinced) and weeping double-bass funeral mutes does become monotonous.

Mr. Wood and his merry men played the work quite magnificently. This much is due to them. Equally fine was the performance of a symphonic poem, "Fatum" (Destiny), a posthumous work of unhappy Tschaïkowsky, who suffers much from those who, ghoul-like, dig up his musical remains, however bad. This "poem" is unworthy of Tschaïkowsky, and its "Fatum" should have been what the composer doubtless meant it to be—viz., oblivion. If Mr. Wood spent half as much time in the preparation of some representative British work as he must have devoted to this wretched "Fatum," how happy some native composer might be made! British art is just good enough for the Promenade concerts, in the estimation of the Queen's Hall authorities; but "taboo" is their motto for the higher class Symphony concerts. In no other country in the world is such an unjust and unpatriotic insult to native art possible or even conceivable, and nowhere in England except at the Queen's (save the mark!) Hall.

Miss Lillian Blauvelt sang Mozart's air, "Non mi dir" ("Don Giovanni"), with all the charm of her fascinating art and sympathetic voice, and she joined Mr. Ellison van Hoose in the first performance of yet another posthumous work of Tschaïkowsky. This was a duet for soprano and tenor, "Romeo and Juliet," which was completed, after Tschaïkowsky's sketches, by S. Tanéieff. It is virtually a setting of the famous Balcony scene, and chiefly remarkable for the fact that the themes are to some extent identical with those found in the composer's "Romeo and Juliet" Overture. There is a strange, insinuating charm about the original vocal phrases and the equally original harmonies of the piece, and the passionate melody at the words "O nuit d'extase," which stands as "second subject" in the aforesaid overture, is one of Tschaïkowsky's finest ideas. Yet the duet made but little effect, partly, no doubt, in consequence of its strangeness and partly because it requires singing in a broader, more impassioned style than that adopted by Miss Blauvelt and Mr. Van Hoose.

That wonderful little violoncellist, Paul Bazelaire, played two solos with uncanny mastery, and we liked him much. We should like him more if a ridiculous statement were eliminated from the "puff" in the programme—viz., that "the German Court sculptor, Begas, executed a bust of the boy, which now adorns the Thiergarten!" Berlin papers of repute have made fun of this preposterous assertion, yet it is repeated whenever the boy plays. The "Tempest" Fantasia, also by Tschaïkowsky, and a distinctly strong piece of programme music, completed the programme and was presented in superb style.

At the second Symphony concert, on the 11th ult., another foreign novelty was produced and failed miserably. This was a suite, "Episodes Chevaleresques" (Op 35), by the Norwegian, Christian Sinding. The four movements are written in the most intricate modern German polyphonic style, and either the composer cannot write for the orchestra so that in performance his various themes shall stand out like so many broad golden threads in a complicated pattern, or Mr. Wood does not bring to such music the skill which enables him to make much of inferior Russian "melody and accompaniment" music. Whatever the cause, the result was distressing. We have never, in our long experience, heard such a polyphonic smudge. There is no other word to describe the extraordinary effect produced by several uninteresting themes going at the same time and all at exactly the same degree of dynamic strength, and as if every instrument were playing in the most ineffective part of its compass! We notice that the suite is dedicated to Felix Weingartner. Perhaps that great conductor will come to London some day to elucidate this mystery; then we shall be able to judge the pieces as music. At present they seem utterly uninspired, and only the Funeral March promises some musical value if properly played. May we ask once more: Whatever in the world caused Mr. Wood to produce such a work? Schubert's divine "Unfinished" Symphony, of which an almost perfect performance was given; Tschaïkowsky's "1812" Overture (wish that it were also "unfinished"!), played with almost brutal emphasis and insistence on its hideous cacophony, and the same highly favoured composer's B flat minor Concerto, with Mr. George Liebling as much applauded albeit not wholly satisfactory soloist, were the remaining orchestral pieces. Miss Kirkby Lunn, whose too darkly coloured vocalisation is not altogether worthy of her fine voice, was the vocalist.

Little need be said about the Wagner concerts, for the programmes contained nothing new, unless we except the Paris version of the Venusberg scene from "Tannhäuser," which was performed at the first concert, on the 13th ult. The soloists, Madame Ella Russell and Mr. Van Hoose struggled bravely and, as regards the former, successfully, both with the great difficulties of the music and against the whirlwind of orchestral sound which Mr. Wood let loose. Altogether the performance was not such as to warrant a repetition of the experiment. Here our criticism ends, for the rest of the performances were as fine as anything the gifted young conductor has ever done. The C minor Symphony (Beethoven's, of course!) and the "Siegfried" Idyll at this concert, and the "Meistersinger" Overture and "Parsifal" Vorspiel at the second concert (on the 20th ult.), were played with quite superb finish and beauty of tone, while in these latter complicated pieces the wonderful polyphony was presented with the utmost clearness to the ravished ear. Miss Blauvelt sang "Elizabeth's Greeting," and, with Mr. Andrew Black, the great duet from "The Flying Dutchman" quite beautifully. Mr. Black's share in the duet was masterly and most impressive, but he does not in "Pogner's Address" ("Meistersinger") suggest the old worthy's dignified bonhomie, nor his age and somewhat "heavy-father"-ly speech. His pronunciation of the German is, moreover, too light and crisp, especially for Pogner's music.

CRYSTAL PALACE CONCERTS.

A pleasing novelty at the concert on October 28 was the performance of an arrangement for chorus and orchestra by Dr. Villiers Stanford of his quartet entitled "Our enemies have fallen." This quartet is the eighth of a series of nine settings of the lyrics in Tennyson's poem "The Princess," written in the summer of 1897. In its new form the quartet is an effective choral song and would suggest like treatment of others of the series. The programme also included Schubert's "Unfinished" Symphony in B minor, Brahms's First Pianoforte Concerto in D minor (Op. 15), and Beethoven's "Choral" Fantasia, the solo pianist being Miss Fanny Davies. Mr. Edward Lloyd sang, his most successful effort being in the impassioned tenor solo "Onaway! awake, beloved!" from Mr. Coleridge-Taylor's cantata "Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast."

A splendid interpretation of Schumann's First Symphony in B flat opened the concert on the 5th ult., which was further distinguished by the magnificent pianoforte playing of M. Busoni in Liszt's Second Concerto and the Impromptu in F sharp (Op 36) and Polonaise in A flat (Op. 53), by Chopin. The programme also included a Spanish scene for orchestra entitled "Sevillaña" (Op. 7), by Mr. Edward Elgar. Although published some ten years ago, it had not previously been heard at these concerts. The work illustrates a rustic fête and is full of rough vigour and broad melody. Miss Lillian Blauvelt sang with great brilliancy and refinement.

The programme on the 11th ult. was headed with Goetz's romantic Symphony in F (Op. 9). The concert was made more than usually interesting by the performance of the following works not previously heard in the Sydenham concert-room: Lalo's Violoncello Concerto in D, a delicate and cleverly-written work, the solo part of which was beautifully played by M. Jean Gérardy; a brilliant and terse Valse-Fantasia for flute and orchestra, by Mr. Thomas Dunhill, in which Mr. E. R. Hudson was a very able soloist; and an Adagio of melancholy character for violoncello solo, by M. J. Guy Ropartz, Director of the Conservatoire at Nancy. Mr. Plunket Greene included in his selection Mr. Charles Wood's stirring setting of Walt Whitmann's poem "Ethiopia saluting the Colours." The next concert is fixed for February 24, 1900.

CURTIUS CLUB CONCERTS.

The second season of these enjoyable evenings was begun at the Prince's Galleries on October 25, when the music was provided by Madame Blanche Marchesi, with Mr. Henry Bird and Mr. Arnold Dolmetsch as accompanists. The finish and subtlety of Madame Marchesi's singing render criticism unnecessary.

On the following Wednesday the executants were Madame Fischer-Sobell and Mr. Ben Davies, and interesting features were the latter artist's interpretations of Beethoven's song-cycle, "An die ferne Geliebte," and Sir Arthur Sullivan's delightful setting of Tennyson's "At the Window; or, the Loves of the Wrens."

The meeting on the 15th ult. took place at St. James's Hall, when Herr Anton van Rooy gave a song recital, including in his selection the entire "Dichterliebe" of Schumann.

The Willy Hess String Quartet provided the evening on the 22nd ult., and Miss Kirkby Lunn sang.

NORTH STAFFORDSHIRE MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

Production of "The Death of Minnehaha."

(By our Special Correspondent.)

This Festival, the fifth since the present series was started in 1888, began on October 25 with Schumann's "Paradise and the Peri." The performance was, on the whole, excellent; at any rate, as far as the singers were concerned. And here we may put it on record that the chorus, a well-balanced body of 300 sturdy singers, did some of the best work during the Festival. They displayed intelligence, resonant voices, staying power, good training, and a delightful enthusiasm. The orchestra, both in this cantata and the "Pathetic" Symphony (which occupied the second part of the programme), was rough but not altogether "ready." The chief soloists in the cantata were Mesdames Ella Russell, Helen Jaxon, A. Lakin; Messrs. Herbert Grover, Ford, and Andrew Black.

The chief event of the Festival came with the morning of October 26. There was a Gargantuan programme that lasted four hours by the clock, and "The Death of Minnehaha" came last. Yet such was the spell which Mr. Coleridge-Taylor's music cast over the large audience that not a soul, from her Grace the Duchess of Sutherland to the humblest amateur in the gallery, moved before the echo of the last chord of the beautiful work was drowned in a spontaneous and splendid ovation for the happy young composer. We have written at length about the cantata in another column. We need therefore only say that our highest expectations were most fully realized, and even surpassed. The little work worked a great wonder: we saw grey-bearded critics moved to tears, and there were many in the audience who made no attempt to hide their emotion. Whoever can do this with the force of his simple melodies is no ordinary musician. For we must here insist, as we have insisted elsewhere, that the music is simplicity itself. There is no elaboration, no striving after new and sensational effects; of development into lengthy movements there is very little, for the poem does not lend itself to such treatment unless the words be repeated ad nauseam and thus all dramatic force be spent. But our composer has the precious gift of inventing melodies which seem the very soul of the words or of the poetic idea, expressed in the greatest of languages: music. Their spontaneity is as striking as their simplicity and their beauty as moving as their directness. We seem to possess in Mr. Taylor that rara avis, a new and original melodist. A new melodist! Do we fully appreciate the significance of the term and the priceless value of the possession? Music is sick for the want of such an one, for the spring of melody seems in danger of running dry, and to take its place, harmony, polyphony, development in excelsis, and orchestration (alias colour) are vainly called to the muse's aid to charm and move us. We fully appreciate the value of these qualities in modern works, provided they are displayed with a master's mastery; and we can be roused to genuine enthusiasm over some of the most daring efforts of that facile princeps amongst advanced harmonists, polyphonists, and colourists, Richard Strauss. Yet what avails the heavy armour, the veritable "Giant's robe" of these modern musical Goliaths against the sling and stone of the simple but inspired melodist? It is the latter who will sway the hearts of countless thousands, as the touching melodies of "The Death of Minnehaha" swayed us and caused our eyes to become dim with a deep and true emotion.

We have laid great stress on Mr. Taylor's gift of melody. Let it not be imagined, however, that he has no other credentials. His harmonies are frequently as expressive and spontaneous as his melodies; they strike the note of acute feeling as truly, or lend warmth and colour to the picture as effectively as the glowing and suggestive orchestration. Indeed, he appears in this little cantata equipped cap-à-pie for a task of no ordinary difficulty.

The chorus sang the work, and the delightful "Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast," which preceded it, as if they loved it, which we feel sure they did. Excepting a few minor blemishes, their performance was most excellent. Not so that of the orchestra! And here we must raise a protest against the treatment which the work received at rehearsal. It will hardly be believed that the composer had no rehearsal with the orchestra alone for the first performance of a cantata which was absolutely new to the orchestra. It is not our concern to apportion the blame for such an inartistic, aye, dangerous piece of false economy. We merely place the fact on record, and express our opinion that Mr. Taylor would have gained the approval and deserved the thanks of all creative musicians if he had left Hanley in disgust, and made the performance of his new work impossible. The result of this lack of rehearsals was seen at performance. The accompaniments were inefficiently played, many of Mr. Taylor's best effects "missed fire" completely, and occasionally certain instruments took long rests that were not in the score! The soloists, Miss Helen Jaxon and Mr. Andrew Black, were all that could be expected under the circumstances; Mr. Black especially sang Hiawatha's "Farewell" with touching pathos.

The programme included Mr. Taylor's tuneful Overture to "The Song of Hiawatha," produced at Norwich a few weeks before; "Wotan's Abschied und Feuerzauber" ("Walküre"), declaimed by Mr. Black with his usual intensity; the charming recitative and air, "O peaceful night," from Cowen's "St. John's Eve," expressively sung by Miss Jaxon; two movements from Weber's Clarinet Concerto in E flat (Op. 74), quite beautifully played by Mr. G. A. Clinton; a bright and taking concert piece for chorus and orchestra, "The voice of Spring," by Dr. Swinnerton Heap, excellently sung and played; and last, not least, the "Eroica" Symphony, in which the orchestra did really well. Mr. Charles Saunders sang the lovely tenor solo, "Onaway! awake, beloved!" in the "Wedding-Feast," at a moment's notice, and acquitted himself with great honour.

The Festival closed with "The Messiah."

M. JULES RIVIÈRE.

A VETERAN CONDUCTOR.

The concert given by M. Jules Rivière on the 2nd ult., at the Queen's Hall, in commemoration of his eightieth birthday, and to take his professional farewell of London, must have aroused many memories in many minds, particularly amongst frequenters of promenade concerts, which were revived by him at Covent Garden Theatre in 1871. Not a few artists who appeared at these concerts have since climbed to fame, and it may interest some readers to know that it was at these performances, in November, 1873, that Madame Antoinette Sterling made her first appearance in England. It was in 1872 that the fantastic, spectacular, and musical conglomeration, "Babil and Bijou," was produced, which would seem to have been the progenitor of the now popular and no less fantastic musical comedy; and it was for "Babil and Bijou" that M. Rivière wrote the chorus "Spring, spring, gentle spring," which sent his name round the world and put £2,000 into his pocket. His reputation, however, was chiefly built up by his great ability as a conductor of light music, and that this is well deserved was shown by the vivacious and finished renderings given at his farewell concert of the Graceful Dance from Sir Arthur Sullivan's music to "Henry VIII.," Litolff's "Robespierre" Overture, a Spanish Suite by Lacome, and a waltz, "Rose Mousse," by A. Bosc. It may be added that M. Rivière conducted in the French style—i.e., seated in the front row of the orchestra, with his face to the audience.

THE HERBERT SHARPE TRIO.

M. SAINT-SAËNS'S TRIO IN E MINOR (OP. 92).

The second concert of these commendable Chamber concerts took place on the 15th ult., and was distinguished by the first performance in England of M. Saint-Saëns's Trio in E minor (Op. 92) for pianoforte, violin, and violoncello. This is opened by a theme which, by its melodic charm, at once excites attention, that is well sustained during the movement. The second number, an Allegretto, is light and gay. It is succeeded by a very dainty Andante con moto, a graceful and rhythmic Grazioso poco Allegro, and a Finale, somewhat commonplace, but vigorous. Other works performed were Brahms's Sonata in G (Op. 78) for pianoforte and violin and Schubert's charming Trio in B flat (Op. 99). The executants were Messrs. Herbert Sharpe, Ferdinand Weist-Hill, and Tennyson Werg.

MR. EMANUEL MOÒR'S NEW SONATAS IN G AND C MINOR.

Messrs. Edward Iles and Louis Pécskai gave two vocal and violin recitals, on October 25 and the 16th ult., the chief features of which were initial performances of two sonatas for violin and pianoforte by Mr. Emanuel Moòr. The one in G was performed by Mr. Pécskai and Mr. Sydney Hann at the first concert. The opening number is obscure and dull. The following slow movement is mournful, but its expression is sincere. Relief comes with the Scherzo, which is bright and pleasing, and the Finale possesses spirit. Mr. Henry Bird played the pianoforte part of the Sonata in C minor, on the 16th ult. The opening movement of this is also open to the charge of dulness, but the next number, an Allegro Scherzando, is showy, the Adagio is smoothly written, and the Finale is vigorous. M. Pécskai played with great skill and brilliancy, and the singing of Mr. Iles provided welcome variety.

LONDON CONCERTS AND RECITALS.

RECITALS.

Mr. Lawrence Rea, who gave a vocal recital on the 2nd ult., at the Salle Erard, is a singer who should speedily take a foremost place in his art. His baritone voice is one of remarkable musical quality, and he sang Mr. Arthur Somervell's cycle of songs, from Tennyson's "Maud," like an artist.

Mr. Ernest Sharpe, at his vocal recital on the 3rd ult., at the Salle Erard, sang, for the first time in England, three songs, respectively entitled "Die Fei" (The Fay) (Op. 41, No. 1), "Waldeszauber" (Forest spells), and "Die drei Reiche der Natur" (the three kingdoms of Nature), by Wilhelm Berger. The last-named, in praise of wine, was the most suited to the deep resonant bass voice of the singer.

Señor Sarasate, assisted at the pianoforte by Dr. Otto Neitzel, gave the first of two violin recitals, on the 9th ult., at St. James's Hall. He was heard in Bach's Sonata in A and in Saint-Saëns's Second Sonata in E flat (Op. 102), and produced two new pieces of attractive character of his own, severally entitled "Miramar" and "Introduction and Caprice-Jota."

Madame Blanche Marchesi's two vocal recitals took place at St. James's Hall, on the 10th and 17th ult. respectively. A feature at both performances was the rendering of Senta's song and the Spinning chorus from the second act of the "Flying Dutchman." At the latter recital two new songs, severally entitled "Love is a sickness full of woes" and "The lark now leaves his wat'ry nest," by Professor Horatio W. Parker, proved very charming.

The two pianoforte recitals, given by Herr Ernst von Dohnányi, on the 3rd and 13th ult., excited much interest. No new pieces were played on either occasion, and it is sufficient to say that his playing was distinguished by that sympathetic quality, exuberance, and brilliancy which have secured him so much popularity in this country.

Signor Busoni's pianoforte recital, on the 22nd ult., at St. James's Hall, was largely attended. His readings of Schumann's Etudes Symphoniques and Beethoven's Sonata in C minor (Op. 111) had some features which did not accord with tradition, but the interest of the listener was sustained by the poetic nature of his interpretations and his perfect command of the keyboard. Chopin's Twelve Studies (Op. 25) and pieces by Liszt were magnificently played.

CONCERTS.

The Saturday Popular Concerts were resumed at St. James's Hall on the 11th ult., when the string quartet players were Messrs. Kruse, Haydn Inwards, Gibson, and Paul Ludwig. Only familiar works have been presented. The vocalists have been Miss Adela Verne, Miss Beatrice Spencer, and Mr. Kennerley Rumford.

Under the title of the "Burnand Orchestral Concert Company," a series of three miscellaneous concerts was commenced, on the 2nd ult., at St. James's Hall. The orchestra consisted of Mr. Fransella's recently formed band for the performance of light music, and on this occasion were played for the first time in England the first and second movements from a Suite by A. Flegier, a Meditation by Th. Dubois, a Passacaille by A. Barthe, a Serenade by Hans Sitt, and a Gavotte by Pierné, but none of these merit detailed notice.

The second concert took place on the 15th ult., at the Queen's Hall, and first performances in this country were given of a pleasing Serenade and Waltz (Op. 16 and 17) by Vincent d'Indy, and a Reverie, entitled "Ricordanza," for orchestra and organ, by E. Pessard. The vocalists at both concerts were Madame Edith Grey-Burnand and Mr. Sydney Barraclough, the possessors of good voices.

Miss Ethel Barns and Mr. Charles Phillips began a fifth series of chamber concerts on the 14th ult., at the Steinway Hall. Miss Barns played with her usual taste and neatness, and Mr. Phillips's contributions to an enjoyable afternoon included Mr. William Wallace's effective "Freebooter Songs," which deserve to be more often heard.

The Elderhorst chamber concerts have been held on Monday evenings at the Steinway Hall, and many excellent performances have been given of familiar works by the great masters. On the 13th ult. an unknown String Trio (Op. 69) by Wilhelm Berger was played, and found to be genial and deftly-written music.

MR. ALGERNON ASHTON'S SONATA IN C MINOR (OP. 86).

MR. R. H. WALTHEW'S SUITE IN F FOR CLARINET AND PIANOFORTE.

Two novelties were produced at the second performance of the British Chamber Music concerts, which took place on the 21st ult., at Queen's (Small) Hall. The first brought forward was a Sonata in C minor (Op. 86) for pianoforte and violin, by Mr. Algernon Ashton. This has only three movements, the first of which opens with an excellent theme of masculine character. The second subject is also expressive, but the interest is not sustained in the development. The second number, a Lento in G, suffers from being diffuse, and the Finale also becomes wearisome owing to the want of coherence and terseness. The executants were Mr. Jasper Sutcliffe (violin) and Mr. Ernest Fowles (pianoforte).

The last-named artist also took part with Mr. Charles Jasper in Mr. Walthew's Suite in F for clarinet and pianoforte. This is a delightful work. It opens with a bright and gay Allegro, which is followed by a romantic Andante tranquillo in D flat, a reposeful Allegretto grazioso in B flat, and a vivacious and pretty Allegro brillante. The wind part was rendered with remarkable delicacy and finish by Mr. Draper. Songs were contributed by Miss Gertrude Sichel.

THE ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

There were several interesting features at the Chamber concert given on the 20th ult., at St. James's Hall, by the students of the Royal Academy of Music. The rendering by Marjorie Hayward of M. Saint-Saëns's Concertstücke for violin (Op. 20) was a remarkable exhibition of juvenile precocity, and a set of nine "Harmonic Variations" in G for two pianofortes, by Harry Farjeon (Goring Thomas Scholar), proved to be clever and pleasing music of a light character, and were admirably played by Marguerite Elzy and Marion White. Two songs, severally entitled "Rondel" and "The time of roses," by Mabel Colyer (Potter Exhibitioner), were expressively sung by Gertrude Drinkwater, and a voice of beautiful quality was that of E. Margaret Llewellyn, who rendered a song by Meyer-Helmund with refined expression. Anna B. McDonald and Henry Boulderson sang Granville Bantock's cycle of six Arabian songs, and other soloists who appeared were Gale Gardner, Florence Reeves, and Claude Gascoigne.

ANTHEM.

IVIMEY CHAMBER CONCERTS AT SURBITON.

THESE excellent Chamber concerts, now in their eleventh season, given by Mr. Joseph Ivimey at the Assembly Rooms, still run their successful course. The eighty-first and eighty-second music-makings of the series were given on the 4th and 18th ult. respectively. Owing to the illness of Mr. Joseph Ivimey, the general arrangements for the season have been made by his brother, Mr. J. W. Ivimey, and for the same reason the part of first violin is now in the efficient hands of Mr. Henry Such. At the two concerts already given the programmes have maintained their usual standard of excellence. There have been most creditably performed such chamber works as Schubert's Quartet in A (Op. 29), Schumann's "Phantasiestücke" (Op. 88), Gade's "Novelletten" (Op. 29), and Beethoven's Trio in B flat (Op. 11), in addition to violoncello, violin, and pianoforte solos, by Messrs. Arthur Blagrove, Henry Such, and Georg Liebling upon their respective instruments. Mrs. Helen Trust, Miss Percival Allen, and Mr. William Nicholl have been responsible for the vocal selections, and the concerted music has been admirably played by Messrs. Henry Such, Alfred Ballin, Alfred Hobday, Arthur Blagrove, and John W. Ivimey. The inhabitants of Surbiton should consider themselves fortunate in their opportunities for hearing such artistically interpreted chamber music as is provided for them by Mr. John W. Ivimey.

THE MUSICAL ASSOCIATION.

"THE PHILOSOPHY OF THE HIGHER BEAUTY OF MUSIC."

THE twenty-fifth session was inaugurated at the Royal College of Organists on the 14th ult., when Mr. Joseph Goddard read the second part of his discourse upon "The Philosophy of the higher beauty of Music."

Mr. Goddard began by defining the difference between the mental effects produced by sight and sound, and said that various senses contributed to form our ideas of the things we saw, though we seemed to exercise the visual sense exclusively; but that sound was a pure impression. Contrast was less complete in music than in scene. To ordinary ears neither a single note nor any conformation of notes had distinctive character, except as part of the æsthetic effect of the piece. On the other hand, colours might be said to have for every eye a fixed individuality and familiar character irrespective of the particular elements they contributed to the æsthetic effect.

A common experience in listening to music was the distinct suggestion of difference of position in space in the perpendicular dimensions. This association was probably derived from the fact that in singing comparatively low notes the set of the larynx was such as to direct the vibrations downward to the chest, whilst in singing some high notes the set of the larynx was such as to direct the vibrations towards the head.

A peculiarity of music was the tendency of tunes to wear out. Some melodies seemed, however, to have escaped the seeds of decay. Frequently it was not the so-called classical strain that wore best; nor did a melody necessarily possess the quality of fadelessness in proportion to its originality. As a rule, the melody which took a deep root in our admiration was largely pervasive; as well as charming, it penetrated to the depths of feeling, it had in some mysterious way a particular deep and broad hold upon our susceptibilities. Music lost its freshness sooner than visual effect, because the feelings of physical life entered far less into its influence.

The limitation involved in music being the world of a single sense was the source of its power. It attended the idea of the infinite with peculiar effect, because it was free from many features of the finite; it suggested the spiritual the more appropriately in that it did not present the tangible; the unseen because it did not present the visible. In a general way we felt music as something external yet immaterial. There was thus some resemblance between our mental attitude to music and that which we bore towards the religious and poetic conceptions. The sense of hearing being perhaps, of all the senses, that which was least associated with the leading sense, vision, the region of effect into which it led us had been comparatively little explored. Thus it might be said that music was relatively a new experience; that in his essays in it man was pushing into a new world of effect, and that in listening to it we entered upon a new form of being. This was perhaps why its deeper imaginative effects tended to produce in us a vivid feeling of the novel and strange—to influence us somewhat as if we gazed on an unexplored ocean.

Musical charm was fundamentally primal charm—one of the many happy coincidences which arose between the infinitely various influences without us, and that liberal margin for versatility and free play which existed as a rule in the constitution of all our faculties. Absolute charm in music might then be conceived as being in line with natural beauty, but the inordinately expressive power of music—that power by which it stirred the depth of feeling within us as no other abstract influence did—seemed to demand further explanation. Upon this power the hypothesis of Darwin relating to music when duly considered tended to throw light: the special part played by the stimulus of sound throughout the long course of organic life, in connection with the deeply laid principles of association, might be at the root of music's penetrating power.

Mr. Goddard concluded by saying that his attempt to account for the influence of music only applied to the higher beauty of the art. In every field of effect, whether natural or devised by man, there was a general continuity passing from that which gave a merely superficial pleasure to that which raised high the wave of art-feeling. Thus under the appellation of music there was an extensive range of effect which demanded no æsthetical explanation at all.

Sir John Stainer occupied the chair and took part in a brief discussion.

THE HENNIKER CHORAL COMPETITION IN SUFFOLK.

THE choral competitions instituted two years since by the Hon. Alice Henniker appear to have become firmly established. The third of the series, which was held at Bury St. Edmunds, on the 13th ult., showed no signs of fading interest either on the part of competitors or the general public. The entries were more numerous than last year, and the competitors reached a higher standard of excellence than on previous occasions, more especially in the important section of choral singing. The judges were Sir Walter Parratt, Miss Wakefield, Mr. Lionel Benson, and Mr. George Power.

The day's proceedings were brought to a close by an evening concert, given in the Corn Exchange, when Barnett's cantata "The Ancient Mariner" was sung by the combined voices of the Ipswich Nonconformist Choral Union, the Bury Choral Association, the Lavenham and Mildenhall Choral Societies, and Mr. Pudan's Ipswich Choir, under the inspiring conductorship of Mr. Albert Visetti. The result was a rendering of general accuracy and spirit, which was listened to with interest by the large audience assembled. The soloists included Miss Henniker, the Countess Valda Gleichen, Mr. Ernest Hodgson, and Mr. Charles Tree, who formed an efficient quartet. The prizes were distributed by the Marchioness of Bristol.

MR. F. H. TORRINGTON IN MONTREAL.

A GRATIFYING TRIBUTE TO HIS WORK.

"HONOUR to whom honour is due." Such a recognition has recently been paid to Mr. F. H. Torrington by the citizens of Montreal, in acknowledgment of his unremitting and distinguished labours in the cause of music in Canada during the past thirty-five years. This well-deserved "appreciation" took the form of a "Musical Festival and Testimonial," held on October 24 and 25, when excellent performances were given of Mendelssohn's "Elijah" and Gounod's "Redemption," under Mr. Torrington's experienced conductorship. With an orchestra of sixty players and a chorus of three hundred voices, full justice was done to those favourite oratorios, nor were the solo singers—Mdlle. Toronta, Miss Julie L. Wyman, Mr. William H. Rieger, and Mr. Ffrangcon-Davies—unworthy of the occasion.

The great feature of the Festival was the presentation to Mr. Torrington by his hosts of friends of a life-size portrait of himself, painted in oils by Forster and richly framed. It proved to be an excellent likeness, and will doubtless be treasured by the veteran conductor, who has done so much for music in Toronto, as well as by generations of Torringtons yet to come. The presentation was made by Mayor Shaw, whose remarks were brief, and delivered in a hoarse voice. He apologised, and excused himself on the ground that he had been helping to send the boys off to the Transvaal, and had shouted over-much. After shaking hands with Mr. Torrington, the Mayor said that the hero of the day had been for years and years the central figure of musical progress in Toronto, and, therefore, he was deserving of the highest admiration of the citizens. It gave him great pleasure to act as spokesman for them on that occasion, and on their behalf to present Mr. Torrington with a very beautiful portrait of himself, which, apart from its artistic value, was a very striking likeness. At a signal from his Worship the portrait was then unveiled amid enthusiastic applause from the large audience and the waving of handkerchiefs by the members of the chorus. Mr. Torrington, who appeared to be much affected by the warmth of the demonstration given him, said in response that he was too deeply touched to express adequately his gratitude to the citizens for their very handsome testimonial. He could find no more words than to say that he sincerely thanked them for their most acceptable gift.

It is quite certain that Mr. Torrington does not intend to rest on his oars. Since the Festival he has conducted three performances of Mendelssohn's "Midsummer Night's Dream" music. As Founder and Principal of the Toronto College of Music, affiliated to the University of Toronto, he exercises a wide and beneficent influence upon the musical life of Canada, and his friends in the old country will join in congratulating him upon his recent well-merited testimonial.

REVIEWS.

The Village Organist. A series of pieces for Church and general use. Edited by J. Stainer and F. Cunningham Woods. Books 19, 20, and 21.
[Novello and Company, Limited.]

"The Village Organist" has attained its majority—that is speaking strictly by the book, as the last instalment of that useful publication is No. 21. Congratulations thereupon. The three books under notice maintain the standard of those that have gone before. In regard to arrangements, there are transcriptions of "The heavens are telling," the theme of Mendelssohn's Op. 82, "Ave Maria" (Arcadelt-Liszt), Tschaïkowsky's "Morning Prayer," and Gounod's "Ave Verum." Thus interest and variety go hand in hand in the foregoing selection. The original soft voluntaries include a "Prière," for the manuals only, by M. Dubois; a very tuneful and musicianly Andante in F, by Mr. E. H. Thorne, and short pieces by G. F. Blatch, Bruce Steane, and E. L. Monk. We are glad to see a better proportion of loud, or "outgoing" voluntaries in this trio of books, several, if not all of which will, we feel sure, be welcomed by organists other than those who are village located. Dr. A. L. Peace leads off with a vigorous "Allegro alla Marcia." Mr. John E. West contributes a scholarly, but by no means dry-as-dust piece of work in his "Passacaglia." Its pedal part presents no difficulties, and the well-developed superstructure above the "ground bass" supplies excellent material for digital achievement. Effectiveness and simplicity characterise a March by Thomas Adams. A popular contribution will, we venture to predict, be found in a "Postlude-Cantique" by M. Dubois, of a gavotte-like rhythm, which contains a fugal episode constructed upon the opening phrase of the main theme. A Recessional March by Dr. Roland Rogers furnishes a cheerful out voluntary. Last, but by no means least, is a brightly written and attractive "Allegro Moderato" by Mr. Charles J. May. The name of this composer is new to us, but, judging from this capital specimen of his capabilities, he may be encouraged to go on in the same vein of so melodious a strain.

Three Spring Songs. Words by Harold Boulton. Music by Edward German. [Cramer and Co.]

It is pleasant to think of the Spring in the Winter, and specially when the charms of the dawn of the year are so pleasantly set forth as in Mr. German's songs. The first, entitled "All the world awakes to-day," seems to have caught the very spirit of the ideal Spring of which the poets sing. Although headed Molto allegro, the voice part is very vocal and the accompaniment is easy to read. The words of the second song, called "The dew upon the lily," mark a more advanced phase in courtship than the preceding—that period in which the adored one permits herself to be advantageously compared to sundry admired objects in inanimate nature—and the music is as persuading as any lover could wish. Number three, "My song is of the sturdy North," is vigorous and assertive in character, and forms an effective contrast to the foregoing. The sentiment is of the optimistic kind that takes a rosy view of circumstances "In spite of wind and weather," and poet and composer are in perfect agreement.

Original Compositions for the Organ. Nos. 280-282.

The first of these three additions to the "Original Compositions for the Organ" consists of a reprint of the late Sir Joseph Barnby's pieces, Allegretto (Joy), Andante grazioso (Sorrow), and the Gloria Patri, from his Service in E. These expressive voluntaries have already proved very acceptable and their re-issue will be sure to be welcomed by the present generation of organists. The organ music of Dietrich Buxtehude (1637-1707) has recently received an attention that has been too long neglected. He was organist at the Marien-Kirche of Lübeck, where his remarkable playing attracted much attention. He instituted great musical performances in connection with the church services, and, says Carl Ferdinand Pohl, "the best testimony to Buxtehude's greatness is contained in the fact that Sebastian Bach made a journey of fifty miles on foot that he might become personally acquainted with the Lübeck concerts." While Buxtehude pays the penalty of being overshadowed by J. S. Bach, yet the great Leipzig cantor did not tramp all the way to Lübeck and study the works of its organist without being influenced thereby. The Passacaglia (in D minor), No. 281 of the present series, has been admirably edited by Mr. John E. West, not the least beneficent part of his skilled handicraft being his method of laying out the music, which, with the excellent spacing of the engraving, facilitates the execution of the player in no small degree. Most seasonable is the issue of "A Christmas Pastorale" (No. 282) by Mr. B. Luard Selby, who has taken the themes of the Introit "Hodie Christus natus est" and the familiar hymns, "Corde natus" and "Adeste, Fideles," and interwoven them in a felicitous and musicianly manner, which will doubtless cause this organ piece to be frequently played during the coming Christmastide. Its freedom from difficulty is a feature that needs no commendation.

Six Songs. Composed by John Hill.
[Metzler and Co.]

The title of the first of these songs is "Sir Hubert's Wooing," and the words may be said to set forth the reward which results from perseverance in love as well as in bread-earning, and the music seems from the first to anticipate the ultimate success of the knight's pleading. For his next song the composer has taken Shelley's much appropriated poem "Music, when soft voices die," and has set it in an unpretentious but expressive manner. In "The author's resolution," written by George Wither, is expanded the sentiment of an old poet concerning the futility of repining over the refusal of one lady, while there are so many others just as good in the—land. Mr. Hill directs the song to be sung Allegro risoluto, and, presumably to emphasise the risoluto, has written for a bass voice; but the music being in a minor key suggests a suspicion of the proverbial grapes of unattainment. The pathos of "Cyril's Song," from "The Silence of Dean Maitland," by Maxwell Gray, finds simple but true expression in Mr. Hill's music, the contrast which forms the feature of the poem being simply but effectively reflected by the second section of the song being in the relative tonic minor of the first portion. "If there were dreams to sell," written by T. H. Beddoes, is somewhat mystical, but dreams incline that way, and the music makes amends by its simplicity. The text of the last of this series is "The Covenanter's Scaffold Song," by James Hogg, and the music appropriately illustrates its sentiment.

The Church Choir Chant Book. Edited by Sir John Stainer and the Rev. L. S. Tuckwell.

THE compilers of this "complete set of chants adapted to the Book of Psalms, specially selected for parochial use," were associated together as organist and precentor at Magdalen College Chapel, Oxford. Their competence for the work is therefore beyond question. A quotation or two from the preface will show the guiding principles upon which they have compiled their book: "Care has been taken in this Collection to make use of those Chants only whose reciting notes are well within the compass of ordinary voices. To all the voice-parts attention has been paid in this respect. But some beautiful and useful Chants which do not fulfil these conditions have been either given as alternatives or placed in the Appendix." Nothing could be better than such considerations. The next quotation is of an equally common-sense nature. "The appropriation of each Chant to its particular Psalm has not been made experimentally; in a large number of cases the Chants have been sung for many years to the very Psalms to which they are here attached, to the satisfaction and edification of choirs with which the Editors have been associated." In addition to many chants (276 in all) both old and new, herein set forth, the Editors contribute thirteen new specimens in the proportion of seven to six between them. The practicability of this collection admits of no disputation.

An Album of Twelve Ballads for Bairns. Composed by Alicia Adélaïde Needham. [Boosey and Co.]

CHRISTMAS time is the children's carnival, and Mrs. Needham's volume of ballads comes very seasonably and is calculated to brighten many homes this winter where little folks hold sway. But although words and music are such as will surely appeal to budding minds, most of the songs will please those of older growth, for several speak as in allegory of life's experiences, and now and again the lines are in turn humorous and pathetic. The music also, although for the most part simple and only demanding moderate executive means, is always musicianly, appropriate to the text, melodious, and vivacious. It may be added that one of the songs is a setting of J. W. Riley's much recited little poem "Little orphant Annie."

The North Coates Supplemental Tune-Book. A collection of tunes composed by T. Richard Matthews.

THIS is a new and enlarged edition of a book containing upwards of 100 tunes by the Rev. T. R. Matthews, who has been rector of North Coates, Lincolnshire, for the past thirty years. The preface gives the purport of the collection in the following words: "Most of these tunes were composed for use in North Coates Church, the choir of which included several members of the composer's family. Hence the title of the book. The aim of the composer has been to supply tunes of such simple melody and harmony as an ordinary village choir can sing without difficulty." The mere fact, however, that Mr. Matthews' tunes have found their way into nearly all the current hymnals of the day is a sufficient proof that they are of no ordinary amateur genus. A very commendable characteristic of these tunes is their devotional simplicity. Their melodies and harmonies flow naturally, and, moreover, there is an entire absence of that straining after effect and originality which not only disfigures so many modern hymn-tunes, but causes them to be unvocal and, therefore, unacceptable to both choirs and congregations. It would facilitate the use of the book were an index of the first lines of words provided in addition to an index of tunes.

La Mascarade. Suite for the Pianoforte for four hands. By George Aitken. (Op. 14.) [Leonard and Co.]

THIS suite consists of three pieces, the first of which is entitled "Rendezvous." It is in waltz measure, and the principal melody has a swing and a lightheartedness that indicate that the meeting is a happy one. The second movement is entitled "Danse," and a very gay dance it is, suggestive of a masked ball. Towards the close an effective contrast to a well worked-up stretto is made by a return to the waltz theme. The third number, called "Le Retour," is equally bright, and seems to imply that the "parting was well made." The music is unpretentious and very easy to read and play, and it possesses a vivacity and gaiety that make it decidedly attractive.

Six Easy Pieces for Violin and Pianoforte. Second Set. In two books. By Max Oesten.

THESE pieces are quite easy, the first book lies within the compass of the first position, if necessary. They are charming, particularly "Evening in the wood," "The Orphan," and "Love Song." Written with real musicianly skill, there is no feeling of the composer being cramped in writing below a certain degree of difficulty. They are excellent pieces for young players.

Air de Ballet, Lamento, Romance, Gavotte, Amoroso, and Moto Perpetuo (Op. 1, Nos. 1 to 6). For Violin and Pianoforte. By Percy Pitt.

VERY interesting pieces for violin and pianoforte, of which doubtless Air de Ballet, Romance, and Amoroso will be favourites. The spirit of the compositions is distinctly modern, as will be imagined from Mr. Pitt's training and associations. The pieces are full of interest to both players; the accompanist has no dull moment. The composer may well be proud of his Opus 1.

Three Characteristic Pieces for the Pianoforte. By Mary Carmichael.

The Spinning-Wheel. Sketch for Pianoforte. By Hugo Willemsen. [Edwin Ashdown.]

MISS CARMICHAEL'S pieces are respectively named "Spring Song," "Lullaby," and "Rustic Scene," and they are each pleasing and well written examples of their class. They present no exceptional difficulties to the executant, but require a crisp touch and a sympathetic style to do them justice. The most attractive is the "Spring Song," which is very bright and gay. The "Lullaby" is graceful and very easy. Miss Carmichael's rustics are more refined than commonly imagined by composers, but this may correct itself in the twentieth century; in the meantime the piece will doubtless prove acceptable in many drawing-rooms.

The Etude-Caprice is a melodious and vivacious little piece, by no means difficult. It affords good opportunities for the cultivation of the staccato touch both from the wrist and the finger.

Spinning-wheels have a strong family resemblance, and when a composer sets himself to illustrate the revolutions of the wheel of romance he puts his powers of originality to a severe test. In this instance the traditional whirr passages are allied to pleasing melody which imaginative listeners may associate with the dreams of a Marguerite who has recently met her Faust for the first time.

THE "Professional Pocket Book" for 1900, published by Messrs. Rudall, Carte and Co., has, as usual, made its timely appearance. Its usefulness to professional musicians and others who have hourly engagements is too well known to need any recommendation.

MUSIC IN BELFAST.

On October 19 Perosi's oratorio "The Resurrection of Lazarus" was performed by the Philharmonic Society, for the first time in Ireland, the solo parts being sung by Miss Lillian Blauvelt, Mr. Whitworth Mitton, and Mr. Charles Tree. The oratorio, which occupied the first and larger part of the concert, was, so far as the artists were concerned, admirably rendered. The chorus sang their parts with great accuracy and with a delicacy of finish that reflected great credit on their training, and the orchestra was fairly competent. The second part of the concert, being of a miscellaneous nature, afforded the crowded audience an opportunity of hearing the brilliant young singer, Miss Blauvelt, in a selection well chosen for the display of her lovely voice and exquisite art. She sang "A vos yeux," from Thomas's "Hamlet," and the "Shadow song," from Meyerbeer's "Dinorah."

On the 4th ult. "Elijah" was performed at a People's concert (admission, 1s. and 6d.) The solo parts were sung, and very creditably sung, by amateurs, while the chorus and orchestra, principally volunteers from the Philharmonic forces, proved that they were well trained in this universally admired masterpiece.

MUSIC IN BIRMINGHAM.

On October 31 the first of Mr. Halford's orchestral concerts was held in the Town Hall. The works performed were Sullivan's "Macbeth" Overture, Haydn's Symphony, "La Reine de France," and Tschaïkowsky's "Casse-Noisette" Suite. All were well given, especially the last. Miss Fanny Davies gave a fine rendering of the solo part in Brahms's Pianoforte Concerto in D minor (Op. 15), and was warmly received. The second concert took place on the 14th ult., when the programme comprised Beethoven's "Coriolan" Overture, Mozart's Symphony in E flat, composed in 1788, Tschaïkowsky's Serenade (Op. 48) for strings (splendidly played), and Liszt's Hungarian Rhapsody (No. 2). Mr. Theodor Werner made a successful first appearance here as the soloist in Mendelssohn's Violin Concerto, his playing being greatly admired. Mr. Halford conducted with great ability.

On the 9th ult. Mr. Howard Hadley, a local pianist, who has been studying under Herr Heinrich Barth, at Berlin, gave his first concert at the Masonic Hall. He played Schubert's great Fantasia in C (Op. 15) with power, and, with Mr. Ernst Schiever, gave a fine performance of the Duo-Sonata (Op. 100) of Brahms. The vocalist was Miss Georgina Delmar, who made her first appearance here and was successful in songs by the concert-giver and by Mr. H. Winslowe Hall, the accompanist.

A Norwegian violinist, Herr Johannessen, made quite a sensation at the matinée of the Society of Artists on the 11th ult. He was a pupil of Dr. Joachim, and he has something of the breadth of style of his great teacher.

The only choral concert of the month was given in the Town Hall on Saturday evening, the 4th ult. On that occasion a new cantata, "A Song of Thanksgiving," was produced by the Choral and Orchestral Association. It is the work of Mr. Joseph H. Adams, conductor of the Association, and is written for soli, chorus, and orchestra. It is on popular lines, tuneful and pleasing, and the performance was good. The reception of the work was most cordial.

MUSIC IN BRISTOL AND DISTRICT.

Sir Frederick Bridge, on the 3rd ult., lectured at the Victoria Rooms on "Shakespeare and Music," the vocal illustrations being supplied by Miss Kate Cherry and Mr. Bertram Mills, soloists, with a choir under the direction of Mr. John Barrett. After the lecture, Sir Frederick Bridge accepted an invitation from the Western section of the Incorporated Society of Musicians to supper at the Imperial Hotel. In responding to the toast of his health, he said he desired to advocate a "Poor Musicians' Fund," not to supersede that society which gave if people had subscribed to it, but for those numerous persons who were unfortunately foolish in their younger years, and came to grief and so wanted help.

At a musical service on the 4th ult., at the Baptist Chapel, Totterdown, the chief feature was a recital upon the organ by Mr. George Riseley. The choir, numbering forty voices, sang creditably several anthems, under the direction of Mr. H. J. Pollard.

The second of the series of chamber concerts at All Saints' Hall, on the 6th ult., was well attended. The executants were Mr. Alfred Gibson (first violin), Rev. E. H. Fellowes, Precentor of Bristol Cathedral (second violin), Miss Griffin (viola), and Mr. R. Le Duc Bucknall (violoncello). Careful renderings were given of Haydn's Quartet in C (the "Emperor"), Bach's Concerto in D minor for two violins, and Mendelssohn's Quartet in E flat (Op. 12). The vocalist (Mr. R. T. Hughes) afforded gratification by his excellent interpretation of the prologue to "Pagliacci" and songs by Liza Lehmann and Schumann.

There was, as usual, a long programme provided for the annual concert arranged by the Post Office Band, the performance this year being held on the 6th ult., at the Victoria Rooms. The vocalists were Miss Gwendoline Dew, Madame Hannah Jones, and Mr. Plunket Greene, all of whom contributed ballads which were greatly applauded.

Under the direction of Mr. J. Bending, the musical portion of the services at St. Paul's Church, Portland Square, has in the last twelve months much improved. On the 8th ult., at a special service, Mendelssohn's "Come, let us sing," was given in a highly creditable manner, the choir being augmented by some members of the Choral Society. The principal vocalists were Miss Eva Hartshorne, Miss Evelyn Gerrish, and Mr. Brierley (Bristol Cathedral). Mr. C. W. Stear was at the organ, and there were two cornets (Messrs. Vincent and Mann) and drums (Mr. Hibbins). Mr. Bending was the conductor.

The third Subscription chamber concert, given on the 20th ult., at All Saints' Hall, was a great success. The executants were Mr. J. Kruse (first violin), Mr. Haydn Inwards (second violin), Mr. Emil Kreuz (viola), Mr. Herbert Walenn (violoncello), and Mr. Herbert Parsons (pianoforte), who gave a fine rendering of Beethoven's Quartet in C (Op. 59). Mr. Kruse and Mr. Parsons gratified by their excellent interpretation of the Sonata in D minor by Brahms (Op. 108), and the other instrumental feature of the concert was Schubert's favourite Quartet in D minor. Miss Mabel Bond sang songs by Sir Hubert Parry, Peter Cornelius, and Dr. Percy Buck. The last-named accompanied.

Bristol Crystal Palace Prize Choir gave its nineteenth annual concert, on the 20th ult., in the hall of the Young Men's Christian Association, Mr. F. Stone being conductor. The principal vocalists were Miss Edith Evans, Miss Clara Aldersley, Mr. A. E. Turner, and Mr. Percy Smith.

CHELTENHAM.

The season of the new Philharmonic Society was auspiciously commenced on October 26, with a concert at the Assembly Room, under the able direction of Mr. C. J. Phillips. The soloists were Miss Gertrude Woodall and Mr. Watkin Mills. The programme comprised Beethoven's "Ruins of Athens" and a miscellaneous part. Tschaïkowsky's "Pathetic" Symphony and Rossini's Overture to "William Tell" served to display the resources of the orchestra, which also accompanied "Angels, ever bright and fair," and Monk Gould's song "The Curfew," sung respectively by Miss Woodall and Mr. Mills. Mendelssohn's "Judge me, O God," and some part-songs were carefully rendered by the choir. Mr. A. Sewell, honorary secretary of the Society, carried out the arrangements of the concert in a satisfactory manner.

MUSIC IN DUBLIN.

On All Souls' Day, the 2nd ult., Vittoria's unaccompanied Requiem Mass for six parts was performed, for the first time, at St. Saviour's Church in Dominick Street, by a specially selected choir of men and boys, the latter from St. Mary's Place Christian Brothers' School, under the direction of Mr. Vincent O'Brien, the recently appointed organist and choirmaster of the church of the Dominican Fathers. Mr. O'Brien has already made a good name for himself in connection with church music of this class, and it is only necessary here to say that the recent performance showed an immense advance on previous ones. The enormous difficulty of this beautiful music renders an adequate performance of such a work as the Mass of Vittoria an event in musical Dublin.

On the 1st ult. the Dublin Orchestral Society inaugurated its second season by an afternoon concert in the Theatre Royal, not an ideal place for such music programmes. Beethoven's No. 4 was the most important feature. The "Hebrides" Overture was admirably played and satisfied the most critical in the audience. Too much praise cannot be given to the admirable playing of the wood-wind and horns in the "Freischütz" Overture.

At the second concert, given in the Large Hall in the Royal University, on the 14th ult., the production of Brahms's Second Symphony must be considered as an event of no little significance. The reading of the first movement and of the third and fourth was clear and intelligible, and, indeed, gave the profoundest pleasure to all music-lovers. The overtures were the "Flying Dutchman" and "Genoveva."

At Mrs. Scott-Ffennell's annual concert Miss Louisa Dale delighted everyone with the exquisite art of her singing of several beautiful songs, and Miss Emily Shinner quite as much by her beautiful playing of the Mendelssohn Violin Concerto and Nardini Sonata. Miss Emily McCready, a young singer with a good voice, also sang.

The Royal Dublin Society has had built a magnificent organ in its lecture theatre, and purposes giving organ recitals during the winter. Mr. W. H. Vipond Barry, organist and choirmaster of St. Bartholomew's Church, gave the first two, on Friday afternoon, the 3rd ult., and on the following Friday evening. Mr. Barry's performances were admirable of Bach's A minor and C minor Preludes and Fugues and Mendelssohn's Organ Sonata in B flat, and he showed off a really fine technique in works by Widor and Guilmant.

MUSIC IN EAST ANGLIA.

The season of the Norwich Corporation organ recitals held on Saturday evenings during the winter months, in St. Andrew's Hall, was commenced on the 4th ult. Dr. Bunnett, the City organist, who is responsible for the programmes, introduced, for the first time, a new composition from his fertile pen—a Toccata in A—which will certainly add to his reputation as a composer. Miss Ethel Belemore played several violin solos in good style, while Miss Alice Phillips, a soprano of no mean order from Stourbridge, and the Rev. H. W. Köblich were responsible for the vocal numbers.

The Great Yarmouth Musical Society is preparing Cowen's "St. John's Eve" for its first concert in December, and Sterndale Bennett's "May Queen" will be the principal feature later in the season, conducted by Mr. Haydon Hare. We regret the notice in last month's issue respecting this Society was incorrect.

Mr. H. F. Howlett's Orchestral Band of working girls gave one of its miscellaneous vocal and instrumental concerts, in the Agricultural Hall Assembly Room, on the 23rd ult. Although these entertainments do not reach a high artistic level, they give considerable pleasure to large audiences, as well as to the performers.

MUSIC IN EDINBURGH.

The most important musical event last month was Herr von Dohnányi's recital, which attracted a large audience on the 11th ult.

On October 31 the Edinburgh public took advantage in large numbers of the first opportunity they have had of hearing and seeing Mr. Moszkowski. The distinguished musician was very well received, and the various numbers of a programme decidedly off the usual lines were heartily applauded. He was most successful, naturally enough, in his own compositions.

Mr. Denhof's scheme of chamber concerts has met with such success in its past sessions that he has ventured on engaging the Music Hall this season and promises very important collaboration. At his first concert, on the 9th ult., Madame Brema sang Schumann's "Frauenleben" cycle and some songs, and M. César Thomson joined the concert-giver in sonatas by Beethoven, &c., and also contributed solos to an enjoyable programme.

Pianoforte recitals were given in the Freemasons' Hall by Mr. Della Torre, on the 18th, and by Miss Walton, on the 20th ult.; and Miss May Gibb gave a concert in the Music Hall, on the 21st ult., in aid of the War Fund.

MUSIC IN GLASGOW.

(From our own Correspondent.)

The musical event of the month has been the re-appearance, on the 10th ult., of Herr Dohnányi. The young Hungarian pianist-composer rather repelled some by the individuality of his readings, particularly of Bach and Beethoven—he played the Chromatic Fantasy and Fugue and the Variations on a Waltz by Diabelli—but the brilliance of his rendering of Liszt's Ninth Rhapsody was irresistible.

On October 28 the Glasgow Select Choir performed Grieg's cantata "Olaf Trygvason," for the first time in the city, and it was favourably, though not enthusiastically received.

The Carl Rosa Opera Company opened a new theatre at Govan in November with six performances of popular operas.

The Athenæum School of Music, which produces an opera annually, has this year studied Gounod's "Mirella," of which seven very creditable performances were given last month.

MUSIC IN MANCHESTER.

There is no more gratifying and conclusive evidence of the deeper hold which music is obtaining over the public than the rapidly increasing success attending really good recitals of chamber music. During past years so many vain endeavours have been made to create a general sympathy for instrumental works not devoted to personal display, and lacking the excitement which attaches to performances having wealth and variety of orchestral interpretation, that one almost despaired of wiping away a reproach to Manchester and a heavy blot upon its reputation. At length, however, hopes are brightening. Not only do the friends of Mr. Carl Fuchs more eagerly cluster around him at the Schiller Hall, and is there a fairer encouragement offered to those of our resident artist-teachers who occasionally venture to call students together; but especially has the Brodsky subscription series achieved a popularity which grows warmer and more enthusiastic with every meeting. And the constant practice together of such accomplished executants as Messrs. Briggs, Speelman, and Fuchs, under the direction of the able principal of our College of Music, ensures always a finished interpretation of whatever work may be undertaken. Nothing could be more worthy of its position than the great Trio of Tschaïkowsky, à la mêmoire d'un grand artiste, which was so magnificently played at the first meeting of this season (1st ult.), by Messrs. Busoni, Brodsky, and Fuchs, between quartets by Mozart and Beethoven.

The Harrison concerts serve the very useful purpose of bringing before us singers whose engagement could hardly be afforded in conjunction with the expenses of an orchestra. Madame Melba and Madame Patti retain all their prestige, and the densely crowded audiences have attested their continued popularity.

At the first of the six choral nights of the Hallé subscription series, on the 9th ult., Bach's "Magnificat" was introduced; and Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise" was given for the eighteenth time, an evidence of longevity of interest which the preceding work will assuredly never attain. Perhaps it was scarcely prudent to give the Grail scene so soon after the performance of the introduction to "Parsifal," in which the same themes are presented in a more compact and better welded form. To the concert on the 16th ult. a special interest was given by the appearance of our citizeness, Miss Pauline St. Angelo, after some years of study abroad. The B flat minor Concerto of Tschaïkowsky afforded her opportunities for the display of executive power of a very high grade, and she was enthusiastically applauded. Mr. Speelman played with remarkably fine tone the viola solo part of Berlioz's "Harold in Italy," and M. Brozel drew upon Wagner for two songs. Mr. Lane's "Elijah" drew a crowded audience, and the choir showed considerable progress.

It is extremely pleasant to note that the nucleus of a fund for the assistance and pensioning off of decaying members of the orchestra has now been supplied by the £500 collected by the friends of the late Mr. Ludwig Strauss, who for several years succeeded Mr. Charles Seymour as the leader of the Hallé band. There is a special appropriateness in thus commemorating the services of so esteemed a musician as Mr. Strauss.

It is questionable whether, at any weekly organ recitals in the provinces, audiences invariably so large, so regular in attendance, and so attentive could be found as those which every Saturday evening, in the Town Hall, spend an hour of more than mere enjoyment listening to the skilful performance of Mr. Kendrick Pyne.

Dr. Henry Watson's splendid gift of a musical library to our city is referred to in another column (see p. 812).

The Philharmonic Society, Aberdeen, gave its first concert on the 6th ult. The orchestral section of the Society has made great strides within the past few years, and the appearance it made reflected great credit on its conductor, Herr A. Reiter. The chorus is not in so promising a condition, as the parts are badly balanced, the judicious choice of pieces, however, hiding to a large extent this defect. The orchestral selections included the "Ruy Blas" and "Meistersinger" Overtures, and Tschaïkowsky's "Casse-Noisette" Suite, for the first time in Aberdeen. The chief effort of the choir was Gounod's "By Babylon's Wave." Herr Ladislaus Pokorny played a violin solo by De Bériot with delightful feeling. Miss Marie Brema was the vocalist, and her performance fully realised the expectations raised regarding her appearance.

MUSIC IN NOTTINGHAM.

Considered as a purely local effort, the vocal recital given by Mr. Arthur Lakin, on the 1st ult., deserves more than passing notice; for, though the programme was certainly ambitious, it was more than creditably executed. The songs selected were by Schubert, Brahms, Leoncavallo, Meyer Helmund, Wagner, Sullivan, and Dibdin. Mr. Lakin was ably supported by Miss Saywell (pianoforte), Messrs. G. F. Johnson (violin), Edwin Thorpe (violoncello), and Herbert Oakeford (accompanist).

A performance of Gounod's "Faust" was given by the Nottingham Sacred Harmonic Society, on the 9th ult., under the direction of Mr. Henry J. Wood. The solos were safe in the hands of Miss Lillian Blauvelt (Margarita), Mr. Louis Fröhlich (Mephistopheles), Mr. Ellison van Hoose (Faust), Miss May Williamson (who took the double parts of Siebel and Martha), and Mr. Montagu Borwell (Valentine), and the part of Wagner was ably sustained by Mr. J. Gadd, of Nottingham.

On the 16th ult. Messrs. Thorpe and Ellenberger gave the first performance of their twelfth season of chamber concerts. The achievement of the evening was the performance of Tschaïkowsky's Trio (Op. 50), in which the concert-givers were supported by Madame Fromm at the pianoforte. The last-named also contributed solos by Chopin, Henselt, and Vogrich, played with artistic feeling. Miss Miriam Edwards was responsible for the vocal selection; Mr. Thorpe was heard to advantage in a so-called Sonata by Porpora, and Mr. Ellenberger's solos, by Sgambati and Max Bruch, were greatly admired. Miss Hogg ably sustained the difficult rôle of accompanist.

MUSIC IN STAFFORDSHIRE.

The second concert of the eleventh season of the Meakin Popular Concerts was given on the 6th ult., in the Victoria Hall, Hanley. The principal attraction was the Rhondda Glee Society, under the conductorship of Mr. Tom Stephens. This combination of male singers, so noted for their fine part-singing, consists of twenty-seven voices—first tenors, nine; second tenors, four; first basses, five; second basses, nine. The manner in which the various part-songs were sung by these enthusiastic, admirably trained Welsh singers calls for high commendation. It is no wonder that their fine declamatory singing was greatly appreciated by the audience, especially the pieces given in the language of the Principality. The remainder of the programme was devoted to a miscellaneous selection by Madame Penn, Miss Bessie Jones, and Miss Wood, which brought an excellent concert to a close.

MUSIC IN WALES.

On the 1st ult. (All Saints' Day) a musical service was held at St. David's Cathedral, Pembrokeshire, which consisted of various hymns, Bowdler's Te Deum in D; a solo for boys' voices, "Lie still, beloved," by C. H. Lloyd; Stainer's anthem, "What are these"; an organ solo, Marche Funèbre and Chant Séraphique, by Guilmant; and a concluding voluntary, "Allegro maestoso," by Ouseley.

The Carnarvon Male-Voice Choir has been commanded to sing before Her Majesty the Queen. The choir sang before the Duke and Duchess of York at Carnarvon Castle, in the early part of this year, when the leader was personally complimented by His Royal Highness.

It is suggested that a Musical Lectureship should be instituted in connection with Bangor University College, and thus bring it into line with Aberystwyth and Cardiff, the other constituent colleges of the Welsh University. It is much to be hoped that this object may be speedily attained.

At the meeting of the Welsh University Court, held at Bangor for the conferring of B.A. degrees, &c., the College Choral and Orchestral Society performed some Welsh airs, arranged for four parts, "Gaudeamus igitur," the March from Handel's "Occasional" Oratorio, and Mendelssohn's "Cornelius" March, under the leadership of Dr. Roland Rogers, and which added very considerably to the effectiveness of the function.

MUSIC IN YORKSHIRE.

LEEDS.

Leeds has during the past month had quite the lion's share of Yorkshire music. The most important event has been the visit of the Hallé Orchestra, on October 25, when the first of the Philharmonic Concerts took place. This was the first visit of the orchestra to Leeds since Dr. Richter became conductor. The playing of the band showed a distinction one has never felt before, and Mendelssohn's "Scotch" Symphony was given with a degree of finish and beauty of tone that could not easily be surpassed. The Philharmonic Society's chorus sang the "Naenie" of Brahms with admirable refinement, Dr. Richter's clear and decisive beat giving them a confidence that had the best possible effect on their performance. Next in importance comes the Choral Union's concert on the 8th ult., when Mr. Elgar came over to conduct his "Caractacus." In spite of inferior material, the impression was more favourable than at the original performance a year ago, for Mr. Elgar conducted with greater power and restraint, with the result of a corresponding gain in clearness. The principals, too, had the advantage of increased experience, for Madame Medora Henson, Mr. Edward Lloyd, and Mr. Andrew Black assumed their original parts, while Mr. John Browning took the three minor ones. "Caractacus" was followed by the "Walpurgis Night," of which a fairly adequate performance was given under Mr. Benton's conductorship.

On the 13th ult. Miss Eisele enlisted the services of the Schiever Quartet, and gave interesting performances of Dvorák's Pianoforte Quintet, and Quartets by Beethoven and Haydn. Two of the Messrs. Haddock's "Musical Evenings" have taken place. Miss Alice Gomez and Mr. Gregory Hast, with Madame Frickenhaus as pianist, achieved the greatest distinction at the first concert, on October 24, while Mr. Moszkowski and his compositions formed the chief feature of the second, on the 7th ult. Both these "Musical Evenings" were duplicated at Harrogate, where the subscribers had the additional advantage of Miss Ada Crossley's very artistic singing at the second concert. On October 28 Miss Pearce and Mr. Wilkinson, two Leeds musicians, gave an afternoon concert, of which Mr. John Dunn's violin playing was the chief feature. An interesting and uncommon concert was afforded by Mr. Staniland Hall's flute and harp recital, on the 17th ult. Assisted by Miss Gertrude Wesley as harpist and Mr. B. Johnson as pianist, Mr. Hall gave a seldom-heard concerto by Mozart, for flute and harp. On the 11th ult. the Leeds Choral Union gave a hastily extemporised concert, in aid of the Lord Mayor's War Fund. The chorus repeated, among other things, portions of "Caractacus," sung by them a few days before, and the miscellaneous nature of the entertainment may be realised when it is mentioned that Handel's "Hallelujah" was closely followed by "Tommy Atkins," given out with the extremest fervour attainable by three military bands and a liberal allowance of percussion obbligato.

BRADFORD.

The first Bradford concert of importance was the first of the Subscription series on October 27, when a capital programme was supplied by the Hallé Orchestra. Dr. Richter gave a fine interpretation of the "Pathetic" Symphony, though not the most finished we have had from him, and Mr. Dohnányi played his exceedingly clever, if somewhat spun-out Pianoforte Concerto. His brilliant and incisive performance certainly lent an attractiveness to the music, but it would bear considerable condensation. Miss Blauvelt was very successful as the vocalist of the evening. On the 10th ult. the Festival Choral Society gave Sir Hubert Parry's "Judith," under Mr. Cowen's direction. The weight and dignity of the work were hardly realised by either chorus or band; but the soloists—Miss Agnes Nicholls, Miss Muriel Foster, and Mr. William Green—were all admirable. In minor parts Mr. W. Thornton, Miss Miller, Miss Jameson, and Mr. Cookson were efficient.

HALIFAX.

The Choral Society began its season with "Judas Maccabæus," on the 2nd ult. Miss Ruth Lamb, Miss Lilian Hovey, Messrs. Brearley and Hughes were the principals in an adequate, if not distinguished performance, conducted by Mr. T. Smith. On the 14th ult. the first of a new series of Halifax Subscription concerts took place under conditions that point to a deserved success. Miss Fanny Davies, Mr. Elderhorst, and Mr. Whitehouse formed an admirable trio, and were heard to advantage in works by Schumann (in D minor) and Mozart, while all three were heard as soloists, and Mr. Kennerley Rumford's admirable singing of Lieder was a very pleasant feature of the concert.

HUDDERSFIELD.

Two Subscription concerts, falling on October 31 and the 14th ult., do not call for prolonged notice. On the former occasion Mr. Goossens's male-voice choir from Liverpool showed what marvellous precision can be accomplished by severe drilling. Nothing smarter can be imagined than their wonderful performance of some musically uninteresting pieces by Gevaert. At the later concert Mr. Sarasate and Mr. Otto Neitzel gave a violin and pianoforte recital.

HULL.

On the 11th ult. the Hull Harmonic Society gave a performance of a work of a townsman, Mr. H. Ernest Nichol's cantata "The Holy Grail." The singing of the chorus is described as of extraordinary merit, especially as regards the observance of nuances of expression. Madame Sadler-Fogg, Miss Isa Frood, Mr. H. Piercy, and Mr. Fergusson were the soloists, and Mr. Nichol himself conducted.

SCARBOROUGH.

The chief things at the first of the Scarborough Chamber concerts, on October 30, was Brahms's Pianoforte Quintet (Op. 34), in which Miss Cass and Mr. Cass (violins), Miss Wheelhouse (viola), Miss Alderson-Smith (violoncello), and Mr. Owen Williams (pianoforte) took part. Mr. Chilver Wilson was the vocalist. The second concert followed on the 20th ult., when pianoforte trios by Schumann and Saint-Saëns—both in the key of F—formed the staple of the programme, and were played by Mr. W. H. Cass (violin), Mr. J. Groves (violoncello), and Mr. Owen Williams (pianoforte). The vocalist was Mr. Chilver Wilson.

MUSIC IN AMERICA.

The musical notes which are resounding through the United States just now are chiefly notes of preparation, though a beginning of what we may call the serious season will have been made in several of the large cities of the country before this letter is printed. Thus, for instance, our Worcester Festival, like the English Worcester Festival, is a thing of the past; and again, like the English Festival, it was brightened by the presence of Professor Horatio W. Parker, who had to hurry across the water after conducting "Hora Novissima," to conduct a more youthful work, his cantata "King Trojan." Lovers of choral music naturally were pleased to see this personal link between the Worcester of the Old World and the Worcester of the New, at a time when there is much talk of a strengthening of the political bonds between the two countries. As for the Festival itself, it occasioned little comment outside of Worcester. I have an impression that many years ago I attempted to tell the readers of The Musical Times something of the development of the Worcester Festivals out of the singing schools and annual "conventions" which flourished in New England half-a-century and more ago. The "conventions" were simple and mayhap rude affairs, but in one thing they were altogether admirable: they were devoted to choral music, and not to the exploitation of solo performers.

Since they have reached the dignity of "Festivals" there has been a perpetual controversy as to the policy which they ought to exemplify. The directors found that the engagement of a "star vocalist" and lavish use of printer's ink brought money into the exchequer, and financial prosperity became more significant than artistic culture. So the choral barrel-organ was permitted to grind out the same works year after year, and the public were encouraged to save their pennies against the nights when the prima donna should dazzle their eyes with her jewels, and, after bewildering their ears with her roulades in any tongue she chose, sing a ballad or two in the vernacular, or its equivalent. And this grew to be the "Festival" for which the people waited fifty-one weeks each year to the forgetting of everything else. Three years ago another policy was adopted, a policy looking to the advancement of the choral features to the first place. The experiment was tried for two seasons, and then Mammon conquered Apollo, and the directors concluded that Madame Sembrich was worth more than any new oratorio. The charming cantatrice was engaged, came, sang "Casta diva" and "Ah! non giunge," carried off $3,000 or more, and left the patrons raving over her gowns and the directors counting a profit. Wherefore all is well; and Worcester will hibernate until next September. The choral works performed, besides "King Trojan," were the "Creation," George W. Chadwick's "Lily Nymph" (also given last year), and "The Damnation of Faust."

Concerning the choral doings in prospect throughout the country I should like to report in full; but that is a physical impossibility. I can offer only a few items. The Oratorio Society of New York will make the loftiest effort with Bach's Mass in B minor, which will be performed in April, and the entire winter will be devoted to its study, since the only other work to be given is "The Messiah," the performance of which, being an annual Christmastide function, will not call for much study. Mr. Frank Damrosch, who succeeded his brother, Walter, in the conductorship of the Society, is continuing his work among the working classes, and this year the People's Choral Union will sing "Samson," with at least 1,200 voices. The Oratorio Society, of Brooklyn, now a borough of New York City, will perform "The Messiah" and Professor Parker's "St. Christopher." At the biennial festival in Cincinnati, under the direction of Theodor Thomas, next May, the principal compositions are to be "St. Paul," Brahms's "German" Requiem, Berlioz's "Te Deum," Dr. Stanford's Ode "East and West," the Finale of Act I. of "Parsifal," and Beethoven's Choral Symphony. Professor Parker's "St. Christopher" will be sung by the St. Cecilia Club, under Mr. Lang's direction, and there will be a sort of exchange of international courtesies in the production of Coleridge-Taylor's "Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast," by the Mozart Club, of Pittsburgh. The same organisation will bring forward Goring Thomas's "The Swan and the Skylark," "The Messiah," "The Damnation of Faust," and "The Seasons."

It would require a page of this journal to tell briefly about the things of first class importance which are to be offered to the music patrons of New York during the coming season. What the Metropolitan Opera is to be all can surmise who read the reports of the last London season; for London and New York are operatically one, though we of the latter city expect a little more concentration of the "star" element than is offered to London—and get it. Calvé and Sembrich, with a De Reszke or two, and a Schumann-Heink, is a combination which does not strike the average patron of the Metropolitan Opera-house as anything out of the ordinary, so far as his expectations are concerned. And this year we are to try the effect of "The Magic Flute" with "nine prima donnas," as the newspapers tell us. Of the Metropolitan Opera performances we shall have seventy odd between December and May, and this in addition to, say, four hundred performances of operas and operettas in English. Then we shall have sixteen Philharmonic concerts, fifteen Boston Symphony Orchestra Concerts, and about forty Sunday night "Pops," with the Opera orchestra and the stars of the Metropolitan company to struggle in eager rivalry for the greatest number of recalls. All the habitués of the Opera-house know what the programmes will be.

H. E. Krehbiel.

The fifteenth season of the Westminster Orchestral Society, of which H.R.H. the Princess of Wales is Patroness, opens under the most favourable auspices, the Earl of Onslow, G.C.M.G., whose interest in the welfare of "Greater Westminster" is too well known to need comment, having accepted, for the ensuing twelve months, the chairmanship of the Society's executive committee in succession to Sir John Wolfe Barry, K.C.B. Following the policy of the Society during the past fourteen years of introducing to public notice new and meritorious orchestral pieces by British musicians, works by Messrs. Battison Haynes, Stewart Macpherson, and Harry Farjeon (the latter being this year's recipient of the Worshipful Company of Musicians' silver medal) are announced to be played at three of the forthcoming concerts. There is again no call upon the guarantors.

The Ealing Philharmonic Society gave a most successful concert on the 18th ult., when Franco Leoni's "Gate of Life" was admirably performed. The second part of the programme was devoted entirely to the works of Mr. Edward German, the President of the Society, who conducted his own compositions. The selection included the "Coronation" March, Intermezzo and Three Dances from "Henry VIII.," the Bourée and Gigue from "Much Ado about Nothing," and the dramatic interlude from "Romeo and Juliet," in addition to two songs excellently rendered by Miss Helen Jaxon. The other vocalists were Mr. Leon Zagury and Mr. R. Courtier-Dutton. Mr. H. C. Tonking led the orchestra and Mr. E. Victor Williams, conductor of the Society, efficiently directed the performance of Leoni's dramatic cantata, with which the concert opened.

The following concerts and recitals deserving of mention have taken place recently. At St. James's Hall: Miss Katie Goodson (pianoforte recital), 14th ult.; Misses Ellen Borwick and Cordelia Grylls (dramatic and vocal recital), 21st ult. At the Steinway Hall: Miss Margaret Vereker (concert), October 26; Miss Ethel Inman (pianoforte recital), on the 7th ult.; Mr. Willy Scott (pianoforte recital), on the 15th ult.; Mr. Julian Pascal (pianoforte recital), on the 15th ult.; East Anglian Quartet (concert), on the 16th ult.; Madame Lilian Griffiths and Herr Carl Friedberg (chamber concert), on the 17th ult.; Miss Carrie Townshend (concert), on the 17th ult. At the Salle Erard: Mdlle. Marthe Girod (pianoforte recital), on the 21st ult. At Queen's Hall: The Fisk University Jubilee Singers, on the 17th ult.

Signor Giovanni Clerici's programme at St. George's Hall, on October 31, owed nothing to any other composer. Pianoforte pieces were played by himself, violin solos performed by Madame Henriette Schmidt, and vocal numbers were rendered by Miss Winifred Marwood, Miss Adelaide Burton, and Mr. Hammett Drake. A dramatic opera in one act, entitled "Lorraine," was also included in the scheme. Its subject was suggested to Mr. Walter E. Grogan by Kingsley's familiar short poem. In musical treatment it belongs to the modern Italian school. Its executants were the Fransella Select Orchestra, a chorus, and, as the three principal characters, Miss Clare Addison, Mr. William Llewellyn, and Mr. Leon Zagury. The composer conducted.

The London Church Choir Association held its twenty-sixth annual Festival at St. Paul's Cathedral, on the 16th ult., when sixty-six choirs, totalling about a thousand voices, took part. On the whole, the singing was highly commendable. In Sir George Martin's imposing Magnificat and Nunc dimittis in B flat a semi-choir of sixty voices was entrusted with the verse parts. The anthem was Henry Smart's "Lord, Thou hast been our refuge," and the Psalms were to chants by Sir John Stainer. The service also included "The Heavens are telling" ("Creation"), which was given with considerable effect. Sir George Martin conducted and Mr. Charles Macpherson presided at the organ.

The Dulwich Philharmonic Society, under the efficient conductorship of Mr. J. W. Lewis, gave a meritorious performance of Mendelssohn's Oratorio "Saint Paul," at the Crystal Palace, on the 11th ult. The soprano and contralto solos were sympathetically rendered by Madame Kate Cove, Miss Adelaide Lambe, and Messrs. Samuel Masters, Edgar Archer, Edgar Harris, and W. M. Wells. The choir, numbering about 180 voices, interpreted the choral numbers with an intelligence and expressiveness calling for high commendation. The organ was safe in the hands of Mr. Fountain Meen, and there was a full orchestra.

The Royal Amateur Orchestral Society began its season at Queen's Hall on the 15th ult., with a programme for the most part consisting of familiar pieces. Of the orchestral performances, under the direction of Mr. Ernest Ford, the best were the Overture to "Euryanthe" and Wagner's "Kaisermarsch," both of which were given with the requisite brightness and precision. Miss Maud Powell's skill as a violinist was displayed in a spirited rendering of Sarasate's "Zigeunerweisen" and of Ries's "Moto Perpetuo." The vocalists were Miss Kirkby Lunn and Mr. Samuel Masters.

Mr. E. F. Jacques gave a lecture on the 13th ult., at the Richmond Athenæum, before a crowded audience, the ex-Mayor, Mr. C. B. Edgar, Mus. Bac., being in the chair. The subject was "The Indigenous Music of India," and the lecture was substantially the same as those previously given by Mr. Jacques in London. Illustrations were supplied by Miss Ethel Wood and Mr. Ranalow, who sang a number of Indian pieces—classical, sacred, and popular—with very great intelligence.

An Eisteddfod at Queen's Hall, in aid of St. David's Welsh Church at Paddington, occupied several hours on the 23rd ult., although only the competitors selected from a preceding examination were heard. Of the choral contests the chief was for choirs of not less than sixty members, the prize being £30 and a gold medal. For this three choirs appeared—the Tulka and District, the South London Choral Association, and the London United Welsh Choir. The test pieces were "All men, all things" ("Hymn of Praise"), and the part-song "Rest, soldier, rest" (J. H. Roberts). Eventually the prize was awarded to the South London body. The prize of £15 and gold medal for the best ladies' choir (test piece, Laaven's "The Spanish Gipsy Girl") fell to the choir of the Stockwell Training School for Teachers, after a close contest with the Royal Polytechnic Choir. There were also duet and solo competitions.

The following candidates who took honours in the Associated Board's Local Centre Examinations for the present year have been awarded Exhibitions as follows. To the Royal Academy of Music—Pianoforte, Frances M. Bennett (Gravesend) and Phœbe W. Elias (Kensington); Violin, Norah C. Underhill (Oxford). To the Royal College of Music—Pianoforte, Rachel N. B. Loveday (Taunton); Violoncello, Dorothy Densham (Croydon); Violin, Maud Bryson (Perth). The Exhibitions entitle those elected to two years' free musical education at the respective Institutions.

FOREIGN NOTES.

Amsterdam.—Marschner's "Hans Heiling," with recitatives (in place of the spoken dialogue) by Theobald Kirchner, was revived last month at the Opera, under the direction of the new Capellmeister, Herr Peter Raabe, and received with high favour.

Barcelona.—The young composer, A. Vives, whose opera "Don Lucas" produced such a favourable impression on its performance, some time since, at Madrid, has achieved another great success with the one-act comic opera entitled "Luz Verde," brought out last month at the Eldorado Theatre.

Berlin.—The Philharmonic Choir, under the direction of Herr Siegfried Ochs, inaugurated its new season, last month, with a magnificent performance of Bach's Mass in B minor. The gigantic work is to be produced annually by this Society in future.——The Singakademie gave a very fine interpretation of Handel's "Israel in Egypt," under Herr Kawerau's direction.——Signor Mascagni, who has been touring with an orchestra of Italian artists in leading towns of Germany last month, also gave a concert in this capital on the 6th ult. The composer of "Cavalleria Rusticana" was received with great cordiality by a numerous audience.——At the West-End Theatre a successful revival took place of Bizet's "Les Pêcheurs de Perles," with Signora Prevosti in the part of Leila.——An amalgamation has taken place between the Tonkünstler Verein and the Free Musical Union, Capellmeister Gottmann being elected chairman and artistic director.

Bremen.—The excellent bass singer, Herr Friedrichs, who, in the minds of many London opera-goers, will be associated with the part of Beckmesser, was the recipient of many congratulatory messages on the 6th ult., the thirtieth anniversary of his first appearance on the operatic stage. His previous associations with the public were of a somewhat different character, he having been originally a bailiff's officer!

Brussels.—M. Massenet's new fairy opera, "Cendrillon," was produced, for the first time, at the Théâtre de la Monnaie, on the 3rd ult., with considerable success. The work was mounted with great magnificence, and the leading vocalists, M. Gilibert, Mesdames Maubourg and Landouzy, as well as the orchestra, under M. Plon's direction, left nothing to be desired.——At the first Ysaye Orchestra concert of the season, last month, a new composition by M. Erasme Raway, a highly gifted young Belgian composer, was produced, under the title of "Fête Romaine," and well received. It forms part of a lyrical drama in two parts, entitled "Freya," upon which the composer has been engaged for some time past.

Coburg.—"Tristan und Isolde" was produced at the Court Theatre, on the 5th ult., for the first time. Wagner's most uncompromisingly Wagnerian work, partly, no doubt, on account of the difficulty in finding suitable interpreters of the principal parts, is not yet by any means so generally included in the repertory of German operatic establishments as might be supposed.

Cologne.—Professor Wüllner, one of the most highly esteemed musicians of Cologne, celebrated, on October 25, the fiftieth anniversary of his first public appearance as a conductor. The Conservatorium, which, under Professor Wüllner's directorship, enjoys a world-wide reputation, is likewise preparing to celebrate in the coming spring the jubilee of its existence.

Constance.—A commemorative tablet has been unveiled at the house, in the neighbouring village of Thalheim, where Conradin Kreutzer, the composer of the once enormously popular opera, "Das Nachtlager von Granada," was born.

Dresden.—Smetana's "The Bartered Bride" was produced recently at the Royal Opera, for the first time, and very favourably received.

Florence.—The production of oratorios, stimulated no doubt by the success achieved by Don Lorenzo Perosi, continues to be on the increase in Italy. The most recent examples are an oratorio, "Gesú all' orto di Getsemane," by the Abbé Giacinto Sallustio, and another, "Il Crocifisso dei Bianchi," by the Maëstro Ferruccio Ferrari, both of which are shortly to be performed, here and elsewhere in Italy.

Gablonz (Bohemia.)—A statue is to be erected in this town to Franz Schubert, the execution of the work having been entrusted to the Viennese sculptor, Herr Jos. Frantzel.

Göttingen.—A commemorative tablet has been placed on the house in which Johannes Brahms and Joseph Joachim resided together in 1853, while attending lectures at the University.

Hamburg.—Goldmark's new opera, "Die Kriegsgefangene," was produced for the first time at the Stadt-Theater, on October 27, with considerable success.

Hanover.—Mr. Frederic Lamond, the well-known Scottish pianist, gave a series of four Beethoven recitals last month, which created much enthusiasm.

Harzburg.—Prize competitions for songs in praise of some particular town or district are growing apace in Germany. First there was the "Mosel-Lied," last year celebrating the river Moselle and its wines (with a prize of some hundreds of bottles of the same!), then the grape-producing Lahn district became the subject of numerous competitive laudatory verses, set to music. Now the Harz Club has divided a prize of 200 marks, offered for a song in glorification of the good town of Harzburg, between two out of a total number of 312 competitors—viz., Herren Ulbrich, of Bremen, and Spielter, of New York.

Mayence.—The twenty-fifth anniversary of the death of Peter Cornelius was commemorated on October 26. Cornelius was not only the composer of the comic opera "Der Barbier von Bagdad," but he was the author of some charming lyrical poetry. On behalf of the municipality, a beautiful wreath was placed on the monument erected over the grave, bearing the inscription, "To the Meister Cornelius, from his native city."

Milan.—According to the prospectus just published by the committee of management, the performances during the coming season at La Scala will include Verdi's "Otello," Puccini's "La Tosca," Tschaïkowsky's "Eugène Onéguine," and Wagner's "Siegfried." Amongst the artists engaged are Mdlle. Darclée and the tenors Tamagno and Arcangeli.

Munich.—The first concert of the season of the Kaim Orchestra, under the direction of Herr Weingartner, took place on the 4th ult., and included Weber's "Euryanthe" Overture, Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony, and Liszt's symphonic poem "Hungaria." Madame Marcella Pregi was the vocalist.——Herr Richard Strauss, the former conductor of the Royal Opera, gave an interesting concert last month, with the co-operation of the Kaim Orchestra, when the programme included the gifted composer's four symphonic poems, the latest of these, "Heldenleben," being heard here for the first time.

Paris.—The first performance in Paris of Wagner's "Tristan und Isolde," which took place at the Théâtre Nouveau, under M. Charles Lamoureux's direction, on October 28, was a brilliant success.——At the Théâtre Lyrique a new comic opera, in three acts, entitled "Daphnis et Chloé," the libretto from the pen of MM. Jules and Pierre Barbier, the music by M. Henri Maréchal, was produced for the first time, on the 9th ult., and received with some favour.——A Symphony in E minor by M. Rabaud, and conducted by its composer, obtained a first hearing at the Colonne concert of the 12th ult. It proved to be a thoughtfully written and truly remarkable work.

Prague.—The cycle of Smetana's operas given at the National Theatre, which concluded last month, was the occasion of enthusiastic demonstrations on the part of numerous audiences, the performances being moreover excellent. A grand concert of Smetana's music, which took place subsequently, included all the more important orchestral compositions of the Bohemian master, amongst which the series entitled "My country" came in for the largest share of applause.——A very successful revival of Marschner's at one time universally popular opera "Der Vampyr," with Herr Dawison in the titular part, took place, on the 6th ult., at the German Theatre.

Rome.—On the occasion of the congress of Oriental scholars, recently held in this capital, a hymn was produced entitled "Stirpa latina" (The Latin race), from the pen of Signor Filippo Marchetti, the composer of "Ruy Blas," and very favourably received.

Vienna.—A Musico-historical Institute, in connection with the University, has just been founded, this being the first institution of the kind in Austria. Archduke Eugen has made a handsome contribution to the fund, the Duke of Cumberland has presented the complete works of Handel, and Dr. Neustadl an interesting collection of ethnographical instruments.——The unveiling of the monument erected in the Stadtpark to Anton Bruckner took place on October 25. The University, Gesellschaft der Musikfreunde, and musical institutions of different towns of Austria were represented.——A new operetta, "Die Strohwitwe," by Albert Kauders, was brought out with great success at the Theater-an-der-Wien, on the 4th ult.——It is stated that, to the great regret of his numerous friends, and, indeed, the Viennese musical world generally, Herr Leschetitzky, the famous pianoforte teacher, will shortly give up his residence here and settle in Germany.

OBITUARY.

LUDWIG STRAUSS.

Former frequenters of both the Monday Popular and Philharmonic Concerts will have heard with regret of the death of Ludwig Strauss, which took place on October 23, at the age of sixty-four, at 7, Cranmer Road, Cambridge, to which town he had retired in 1893. Strauss was born at Pressburg, March 28, 1835. He was a student at the Vienna Conservatorium from 1843 to 1848, where he studied the violin under Böhm. In 1855 he undertook his first tour as a virtuoso violinist, and in 1857, having made the acquaintance of Piatti, he made a second tour with that inimitable artist in Germany and Sweden. Strauss made his first appearance in England on June 5, 1860, when he played at Ella's Musical Union Matinée. Four years later he made this country his home, dividing his time between London and Manchester. He led the late Sir Charles Hallé's Orchestra in Manchester and the Philharmonic in London, and frequently played at the Popular Concerts, the Crystal Palace, and elsewhere with great acceptance. Herr Strauss was formerly "conductor" of the Queen's Private Band, the duties of the "conductor" being practically those of "leader" of that royal orchestra. In 1893 he was succeeded in this post by Mr. Alfred Gibson.

CHARLES MACKESON.

The death took place on October 30 of the Rev. Charles Mackeson, vicar of All Hallows, North St. Pancras, in his fifty-seventh year. Born May 15, 1842, Mr. Mackeson was originally a writer in the Admiralty. He subsequently (in 1885) took orders and threw his whole energies into the establishment of a new parish in a poor district in the North of London. Mr. Mackeson's claim to notice in these columns rests on his musical-literary work. He compiled that useful annual, now unfortunately discontinued, "Guide to the Churches of London and its Suburbs." He was editor of The Choir (1879-80) and of the "Churchman's Shilling Magazine," and frequently lectured on Church music and kindred subjects. Mr. Mackeson also contributed thirty articles to Sir George Grove's "Dictionary of Music and Musicians."

CORRESPONDENCE.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE MUSICAL TIMES."

Sir,—Your article on barrel-organs has brought to my recollection a curious occurrence at which I was present.

While St. Paul's, Avenue Road, Regent's Park, was in course of erection, services were held in a temporary church which already existed in the Hampstead fields, on a spot now occupied by the lower end of Fitzjohn's Avenue. The incumbent was the Rev. J. M. Farrar. The "New Version" of the Psalms, with the few hymns which always were bound up with the prayer-book in those days, were in use and the accompaniment was furnished by a barrel-organ worked by an old man named Bull (by some of us called Ole Bull, to the puzzle of our non-musical friends), who lived in a charming rose-covered cottage adjoining the church, of which he took charge. Roses, alas! have long ceased to grow in this neighbourhood!

On a certain Christmas Day, in the course of the service, Mr. Farrar gave out the first Christmas hymn, the words of which are "High let us sing our tuneful notes." Bull began to grind out the tune appropriate to the second hymn, "Hark! the herald angels sing." No ingenuity could reconcile the first hymn to the second tune, and the situation was painful. Mr. Farrar adopted what no doubt was the wisest course. When proceeding to give out the first line he announced the second Christmas hymn. Our organist, however, was a man who rose to the occasion. He also appreciated the position, and as soon as the barrel had revolved, and he was able to change it, with great dexterity he proceeded to substitute a barrel with the appropriate tune for the first hymn! We were thus landed again in a similar difficulty. There was nothing left for it but to sort ourselves out as best we could, but the occasion was trying to those whose sense of the ludicrous had to be restrained by the sanctity of the place.

Such accidents are not always confined to barrel-organs. I remember the late George Forbes, organist of St. Mary's, Bryanston Square, an excellent and well known professor, telling me that on one occasion by some misunderstanding he gave out the wrong tune. St. Mary's is one of the large Marylebone churches with the organ in the West gallery. At that time the Rev. John Hampden Gurney, some of whose hymns are found in most collections, was rector. He took much interest in the music, and was a man of remarkable directness both of purpose and language. He of course discovered the mistake while his organist was complacently giving out his tune. Mr. Gurney at once called out across the huge church, "There's something wrong with the tune, Mr. Forbes!"

Perhaps the wonder is that such complications so seldom arise.—I am, sir, yours truly, 100, Fellows Road, N.W., J. E. Matthew.

BRIEF SUMMARY OF COUNTRY AND COLONIAL NEWS.

We do not hold ourselves responsible for any opinions expressed in this summary, as all the notices are either collated from the local papers or supplied to us by correspondents.

Bath.—The Avon Vale Musical Society gave further proof of its efficiency at the Assembly Rooms, on the 11th ult. Sir Hubert Parry's "Ode to St. Cecilia's Day" was performed, when the chorus, under Mr. J. S. Liddle, did good work. Miss Lucy King gave an excellent rendering of Schumann's beautiful Concertstücke, and Somervell's "Forsaken Merman" was also included in the programme, Mr. Harford singing the solo parts effectively and with much feeling. Miss Margaret Baxter, beside singing the solo in the "Ode to St. Cecilia," contributed two songs, and Miss Leila Ball played two oboe solos, in excellent style, from Boisdeffre's "Village Scenes." Mr. J. S. Liddle was, as usual, an able conductor.

Chesterfield.—The Chesterfield Harmonic Society, on the 14th ult., gave a highly satisfactory performance of Sir Hubert Parry's "Job," in the Stephenson Memorial Hall. Mr. J. Lycett, of Sheffield, ably sustained the exacting part of Job, and Mr. Hamer and Mr. T. H. Brearley did full justice to themselves in their respective parts. The string band, efficiently led by Mr. J. H. Parkes, rendered most useful services, and Mr. J. H. Gaunt presided at the pianoforte. The singing of the choir was worthy of high praise throughout, and evidenced most careful training on the part of Mr. G. A. Seed, the excellent conductor of the Society.

Dudley.—A most successful performance of Mendelssohn's "Elijah" was given in the Public Hall by the Dudley Vocal Union, on the 8th ult. The solos were excellently rendered by Madame Carrie Siviter, Miss Lizzie Neal, Mr. Eynon Morgan, and Mr. Dan Price. The band, led by Mr. T. M. Abbott, and the chorus together numbered 150 performers. Mr. Walter Aston accompanied and Mr. W. H. Aston was the able conductor.

Ipswich.—A successful vocal recital was given by Miss Marie Roberts, in the Lecture Hall, on October 30, when she was assisted by Mr. Charles Copland, Miss Edie Reynolds, and Mr. Stanley Hawley. A similar recital was given by Miss Roberts on the following day at Felixstowe.

Jersey.—"Elijah" was performed by the Jersey Choral Society, on October 26, when the Oddfellows' Hall was crowded and many were unable to gain admittance. The principal vocalists were Miss Stella Maris, Madame Lena Law, Mr. Emlyn Jones, and Mr. A. H. Gee. The chorus and orchestra, numbering 100 performers, were under the efficient conductorship of Mr. C. Stevens.

Llandudno.—A most successful chamber concert was given in the Pier Pavilion, on October 30, by Miss Margaret Thomas, assisted by Mrs. J. W. Stansfield (vocalist), M. Henri Werbrughghen (violin), and Mr. J. Walton (violoncello). The programme included Trio in D minor (Schumann), for the first time in Llandudno; Sonata for pianoforte and violin, Op. 13 (Grieg); "Il Moto continuo" (Weber); Sonata for pianoforte and violoncello in D, Op. 58 (Mendelssohn); Romance (Svendsen); and Mazurka (Wieniawski).

Londonderry.—Mr. H. B. Phillips opened his ninth concert season at Londonderry on the 2nd ult. and at Belfast on the 3rd ult. The artists were Madame Albani, Miss Ada Crossley, Miss Laura England, Mr. William Green, Mr. Frederick Dawson, Mons. Johannes Wolff, Mons. Henry Bramsen, and Mr. F. A. Sewell.

Maidstone.—The Choral Festival Choir and Orchestra of 150 performers gave their fifth annual concert on October 25, in the Corn Exchange, Gounod's "Redemption" being the work chosen for performance. The artists were Miss Eva Weston, Miss Ada Watchurst, Mr. Alfred Pennington (solo tenor of St. Margaret's, Westminster), Mr. George Lauder, and Mr. Walter Syckelmore. Mr. H. Lyell Tayler, of the Queen's Hall orchestra, was the principal violin, and Mr. A. Clair was the harpist. The choruses were given with great power and expression by the choir, and the orchestra, augmented by a large contingent from the Royal Engineers, played the accompaniments to perfection. Mr. F. W. Dutnall conducted.

Sligo.—A most successful concert was given in the Town Hall, on the 8th ult., by the Sligo Musical Society. The first part of the programme consisted of Mr. W. H. Cummings's melodious cantata "The Fairy Ring," which was given by a chorus of eighty voices, accompanied by an efficient orchestra, under the baton of the able conductor, Mr. H. Loretto. The soloists were Mrs. Loretto, Mrs. Tarleton, Mrs. Franklin, Mr. Anderson, Mr. Erskine, Mr. Blennerhassett, and Mr. Reddy. The rendering of the work was excellent, every attention was given to expression, and the attack in all parts was irreproachable, giving evidence of careful and efficient training.

Stockport.—The first concert of the season was given on the 6th ult., by the Stockport Choral and Orchestral Society, in the Armoury, before a large and appreciative audience. The principal pieces in the programme were Stanford's "Revenge" and Brahms's "Song of Destiny." Miss Greta Williams was the soloist and sang, by request, "O rest in the Lord," and Mr. Leon Veerman contributed violin solos. Mr. Broome was an efficient conductor.

Stourbridge.—On the 13th ult. a most interesting and ambitious concert was given, under the direction of Mr. G. Halford. The programme included Beethoven's Choral Symphony, of which a highly creditable rendering was given, though the band consisted largely of amateurs. Stanford's "Phaudrig Crohoore" formed the second part, and between the two works an Idyll for orchestra, by Mr. Halford, was performed. The concert was a great event for the locality and a great success.

Torquay.—On the 4th ult. a Festival Service was held in Upton Church, to commemorate its Jubilee, when Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise" was given. The choir was augmented for the occasion and, with the orchestra, numbered about 150 performers. Dr. D. J. Wood, organist of Exeter Cathedral, presided at the organ, the orchestra was led by Mr. J. Sparke, and Mr. F. J. W. Crowe, organist and choirmaster of the church, conducted. The soloists were Madame Adeline Gregory and Messrs. A. J. Larwill and S. Moore, Miss Maude Hill helping in the duet "I waited for the Lord." The service, which was admirably rendered and greatly appreciated, concluded with Sir George Martin's Jubilee Te Deum.

Organ Appointments.—Dr. Orlando A. Mansfield, Organist and Choirmaster to Belgrave Congregational Church, Torquay.—Mr. George Luscombe, Organist and Choirmaster to St. David's, Exeter.—Mr. Frederic Leeds, Organist and Choirmaster to Parish Church of St. Margaret, Lee.—Mr. W. H. Stevenson, Organist and Choirmaster to All Saints' Church, Southend-on-Sea.—Mr. Arthur F. Tate, Organist and Choirmaster to Malton Wesleyan Church.—Mr. W. C. Edwards, to Holy Trinity, Wicker, Sheffield.—Mr. Herbert Antcliffe, Organist and Choirmaster to St. Jude's, Moorfields, Sheffield.

ANSWERS TO CORRESPONDENTS.

H. I.—The direction above the first movement of Beethoven's Pianoforte Sonata in C sharp minor (Op. 27, No. 2), "Si deve suonare tutto questo pezzo delicatissimamente e senza sordini," means: "The whole of this piece [here evidently intended to refer to the movement] should be played most delicately and without the sourdine, or muting stop," generally understood to mean with the loud or right-hand pedal. Although the pedal is directed to be used throughout the movement, it must, of course, be raised at every change of harmony. For an interesting article on "Beethoven and the Sordino," by Mr. J. S. Shedlock, see The Musical Times for August, 1895, p. 516.

M. B.—According to the most authentic edition, your first doubtful note is B sharp, not B natural, and that in your second example F natural, not F sharp. In the slow movement, the second and third notes of the second violins (bar 2) are G, not B flat, as the G supplies the necessary third to the chord. (Beethoven's Fourth Symphony, Allegro vivace of the first movement, bars 81 and 90, and the slow movement as indicated above.)

J. H. B.—The chant that you heard sung at Magdalen College Chapel, Oxford, to Psalm 136, and of which you send the melody, is by the late Sir George Elvey and will be found in No. 18 of his "Thirty Cathedral Chants," published by Messrs. Novello. The chant was composed for that particular Psalm.

R. G. B.—We should advise you to consult some eminent type-founder. In order to protect your design you should register it under the Copyright of Designs Acts. Apply to Ralph Griffin, Esq., at the Designs and Trade Marks Office, 25, Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane, W.C.

T. P. F.—Your best plan will be to write to the following Conservatories for the special information you desire:—Akademische Hochschule für Musik, Berlin; Konservatorium für Musik, Cologne; Konigl. Konservatorium für Musik, Dresden; and ditto, Leipzig.

E. B.—Most probably a mere coincidence, or an instance of "unconscious plagiarism" (Schubert's "Die Allmacht," bars 10-12 from the end; and Wagner's "Rienzi's Prayer," bars 49-52 from the end).

Enquirer.—The Aura, or Mund harmonica, was invented by Scheibler, of Crefeld, in 1816. It is a combination of from six to ten Jew's-harps.

W. E.—Macfarren's "Harmony" is published by Messrs. Cramer and Co. His Lectures on Harmony by Messrs. Longmans.

foreign fingering, so called.

S. F.—The March only from Sullivan's "Henry VIII." music is arranged for the organ. Messrs. Metzler are the publishers.

M. K. J.—Dr. Sawyer's "Extemporization" (No. 33 of Novello's Series of Primers) will doubtless meet your requirements.

Wilton.—Max Bruch's Violin Concerto in G minor may be played at the following rates: Allegro moderato, ♩ = 104; Adagio, ♪ = 63; Allegro, 𝅗𝅥 = 84.

L. R. A. M.—The flat prefixed to the E, though not strictly necessary, is doubtless inserted for the sake of guarding against an E natural being played.

M. P. C.—The diplomas granted by the Royal Academy of Music and the Royal College of Music are hall-marks of the highest value.

C. B.—A good pedal attachment to a pianoforte is by far the more preferable method.

The Questions of H. E. B., L. A. H., and "Mona" are held over till next month.

A correspondent, "E. A. P.," asks for the best definition of the word "Troop" in connection with military music. He suggests the following: "Troop. A piece of music composed to be performed during the trooping of the colours on the Queen's birthday, always in waltz time, but in which great latitude is allowed as to its style of composition." Perhaps some of our readers may feel disposed to suggest other definitions of the term.

"These pieces deserve to become widely known. We have here music that is the evident outcome of the composer's innermost feeling. Its sincerity is as obvious as its charm is penetrating. The Autumn season has inspired Mr. Percy Pitt with many beautiful thoughts. It is a pleasure to come across music so really worthy of the name, and it may be hoped that the 'Harmonies d'Automne' will soon figure on some important concert programme. In the meanwhile we gladly draw the attention of serious amateurs towards these delightful pieces, which can be played over and over again with increasing pleasure."—Morning Post.

"The result, in the present case, leaves no doubt that into all the places which know his previous compositions 'Una' will find a way and become as much a favourite as its forerunners. . . . Mr. Gaul considers before all things the elegance and symmetry of his melodic phrases."—Musical Times.

"We believe that Mr. Gaul has attained greater popularity with small English provincial choral societies than any other composer, living or dead."—London Daily Graphic.

This Edition contains the additional Soprano air "Sun of my soul."

"A distinct advance upon any of its predecessors."—Birmingham Daily Post.

"The Exeter Oratorio Society last night achieved a brilliant success, and it may safely be said, without fear of exaggeration, that never before have they performed a work more satisfactory to themselves or more interesting to the audience than 'Joan of Arc.'"—Western Times.

"One of the most delightful Concerts ever given by the South Shields Choral Society was that of last evening, when the principal piece was 'Joan of Arc.' We cannot speak too highly of Mr. Gaul's work, which is of the most interesting description, and will doubtless soon be a favourite with choral societies."—Shields Daily News.

IMPORTANT TO PIANISTS.

BY

J. MARSHALL BUCKLEY.

An entirely new work, which has received the highest encomiums from all musicians who have seen it, such as Dr. J. C. Bridge, M.A., Samuel Aitken, Hon. Sec. Associated Boards, and many others.

This work is laid out according to the requirements of the Ass. Boards, R.A.M. and R.C.M.—Auto-Examiner A.; the Incorporated Society of Musicians and Trinity College—Auto-Examiner B., in such a manner that students may practise as they will be examined, and may, in a regular daily quota, cover the whole of their Scale and Arpeggio work each week, or fortnight, as may be convenient.

There is no possibility of any item being overlooked or neglected, a thing hitherto unattainable.

This work is not only available for examination candidates, but should be in the possession of every pianist who wishes to keep abreast of his work.

"Students cannot be too careful to avoid a stereotyped style of practising scales and arpeggios. Your manual guards very effectively against this, and I am sure it will be a very great help both to teachers and pupils.

"Joseph C. Bridge, M.A., Mus. Doc."

"Samuel Aitken, Hon. Sec. Ass. Boards. (Unofficial)."

THE DEATH OF MINNEHAHA

A CANTATA

FOR SOPRANO AND BARITONE SOLI, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA

THE MUSIC COMPOSED BY

S. COLERIDGE-TAYLOR.

(Op. 30, No. 2.)

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.
Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. Words only, 5s. per 100. Vocal Parts, 1s. each ; String Parts, 7s. 6d.
Wind Parts and Full Score (in the Press).

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

"Minnehaha" is, in its way, as complete and adequate a musical expression as the "Wedding-Feast," and from the very nature of the case one much more moving and impressive. . . . There is in it the same frequent repetition of a few short themes presented under varying conditions, such as relieve the strain of their persistency; there is the same aptness of expression in the phrases, the same partiality for diatonic melody, the same wealth of resource in the orchestration, and an equal measure of the persuasiveness which brings us to think that thus and thus, and in no other way, are the poet's thoughts best clothed upon with musical beauty. The fact just stated embodies the highest triumph of the composer's means and methods, and is the more remarkable because, apart from harmonies and colours that show the freedom of modern treatment, the melodies in which the real and true spirit of music always lies have the simplicity of an older time. About them there is nothing artificial. They never suggest that they have been sought after, but rather that they have come of themselves. Handel is hardly more natural than Mr. Coleridge-Taylor in this regard, or his subjects, so to speak, more inevitable, though, of course, their treatment by the old master, on the one hand, and the young aspirant, on the other, is in the broadest possible contrast. I do not in the least degree underrate the value of Mr. Taylor's powerful and expressive harmonies or the picturesqueness of his orchestration, but I contend, all the same, that the secret of his music's moving force lies in the happy phrases upon which he insists with such remarkable iteration. When sorrowful, there are tears in each one, and with a few notes he can touch the springs of emotion in a degree refused to many who labour strenuously and with elaboration towards the same end. Than this I can say nothing more conclusive of the fact that the youthful Anglo-African is a man with a mission, with a gift of free and natural eloquence in a domain which is the favoured home of that priceless quality, and with a potentiality such as must draw to himself the hope and expectation of all who wish well to English art.

DAILY CHRONICLE.

"The Death of Minnehaha" made a deep impression on the listeners. It certainly realised the expectations no less kindled by acquaintance with the first section, "Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast," than by the rumours of its pathetic character. As its position in the programme was the reverse of favourable for such a work, the effect it created was specially gratifying. Mr. Coleridge-Taylor avails himself of all the resources of the modern orchestra, the scoring being exceptionally full—and to emphasise certain passages he freely uses the bass drum, cymbals, and harp. Both chorally and instrumentally the opening passages are rather weird, as they presage the approach to Hiawatha's wigwam of the spectres of Famine and Fever, whose arrival is indicated in a genuinely dramatic manner. Additional suggestiveness is imparted by the dread visitors being respectively represented by the two soloists—baritone and soprano—who are thus heard for the first time. The chorus quickly resume, and the line describing how the doomed Minnehaha "Lay there trembling, freezing, burning," is graphically, but thoroughly legitimately dealt with alike in the voice parts and the accompaniment. Hiawatha's prayer (for baritone solo), "Give your children food, O Father," and the final breathing by Minnehaha (soprano soloist) of the name of her husband, are so agonising in their poignancy, that it is impossible to listen unmoved.

MANCHESTER COURIER.

The tragedy of Minnehaha's death and the sadness of Hiawatha's farewell were brought out with an intensity that profoundly affected the audience.

ATHENÆUM.

Mr. Taylor possesses the rare gift of expressing his thoughts and feelings in a simple, direct manner; with a few characteristic notes, a few expressive chords, he achieves more than some composers with their pretentious themes and startling progressions. He has not so much set to music as illustrated the lines of the poem; there is plenty of skill in the music, and it is all wisely hidden behind the notes; or in other, and perhaps better terms, the vivid soul of the music shines through its body. . . . "The Death of Minnehaha" is hitherto Mr. Taylor's highest effort, and if the final section of his trilogy shows no falling off, then, indeed, he will have produced something leaving powerful footprints on the sands of time.

BIRMINGHAM DAILY POST.

The young Anglo-African we may claim as our own. That he is a genius I do not hesitate to declare. He is in gorgeous imagination, a second Tschaïkowsky; in economy of thematic material, another Dvorák. . . . Fine as is "Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast," the "Death of Minnehaha" is finer. One stands for comedy, the other represents tragedy. . . . Few things in poetry are more pathetic and heartbreaking than the description of the famine in the story of Hiawatha—his fruitless quest for food in the snow-clad forest; the delirium of poor Laughing Water, the victim of fever and starvation; and the devotion of the old Nokomis. These are treated by the young composer with a power of pathos that no one can listen to unmoved. I must confess to being so overcome more than once that I could scarcely control my feelings. The themes are few, but they are so varied in treatment that every page is a fresh revelation. Hiawatha's prayer for food, and his farewell to Minnehaha, are nobly expressed, and are infinitely more touching than even the scene between Wotan and Brünnhilde.

BIRMINGHAM DAILY GAZETTE.

"The Death of Minnehaha" touches a higher level than "Hiawatha's Wedding," and the reason is not hard to discover. In the "Feast" we have lightness and something like revelry. In "Minnehaha" we have tragedy, not, be it observed, the deep, and, so to speak, scientific and studied tragedy of the Greeks, but a human, tender, touching tragedy, which is all the more effective by reason of its simplicity. From the first bar the music takes hold. . . . Those who only see the pianoforte score cannot realise the tremendous effect of the unaccompanied call: "Minnehaha!" on pages 20 and 21, where the utmost passion of human desolation is expressed by the unaccompanied chorus.

MANCHESTER GUARDIAN.

It is a story of despair, desolation, and death, and the composer has fully realised its tragic interest, every phase of it being vividly pictured. He employs the same devices, he startles again by his rhythmic innovations; some of his themes are almost barbaric in their wildness. In contrast with the joyousness, the fun, and the humour of its predecessor, the new work is very striking. A great effect is produced by the composer's treatment of the poet's awful personification of Famine and Fever, and there is something wonderfully pathetic in Minnehaha's death-song.

STAFFORDSHIRE SENTINEL.

Mr. S. Coleridge-Taylor's new work is magnificent. No less a term will describe it. It has proved to be an all-round improvement on the "Wedding-Feast." The choruses are more varied and beautiful, and the solos are inexpressibly affecting. . . . Many were deeply touched by the dramatic story and its wonderful treatment. . . . This work distinctly classes Mr. Taylor as one of the very finest composers who have seen the light in what some people will persist in describing an unmusical country.

PROGRESSIVE STUDIES

FOR THE PIANOFORTE

EDITED, ARRANGED IN GROUPS, AND THE FINGERING REVISED AND SUPPLEMENTED

BY

FRANKLIN TAYLOR.

This Collection of Studies is intended to illustrate the various elements of a complete course of pianoforte technique, and to provide students with the means of attacking and overcoming the different special difficulties which have to be encountered. With this view, the Studies have been arranged in groups, those in each group being placed in progressive order, and having reference to some one particular difficulty. The greater part of the Studies themselves have been selected from the standard works of the most eminent Study-writers, and with these are included numerous others, which, though of equally great practical utility, have hitherto been less generally accessible.

* These Books contain Studies composed by Mr. Franklin Taylor specially for this Series.

FIFTY-THREE BOOKS, PRICE ONE SHILLING EACH.

"Mr. Franklin Taylor's splendid series of 'Progressive Studies' has advanced considerably since the earlier books were reviewed in The Times; those lately issued contain a book of Staccato Studies, two books of 'Repetition and Tremolo,' two of 'Part-playing,' and two of 'Rhythm.' The examples are chosen from numerous sources that are not, for the most part, in the ordinary repertory of the schools; and it is almost pathetic to think of the acres of Czerny's works, for example, that the able editor must have traversed in order to find good studies for the different branches of his book. His own examples are one and all excellent in design, and many of them are agreeable compositions, though all keep their practical end well in view. The choice of examples for 'Part-playing' was so wide that this of itself must have been a difficulty; the arrangements from Rink's Organ School are very suitable, and this division of the book ends with a Fugue by Mozart. No doubt the reason for not including any examples by Bach in this class was that the immortal '48' are in themselves the highest school of part-playing, and that any mere selection from them would be very little use. The books on 'Rhythm' contain many different kinds of difficulties, and here and there are studies that look quite easy at first, only revealing after a time some passage calculated to entrap the unwary student. The collection is entirely worthy of praise, and when the set of fifty-two books is completed it should be recognised as the standard work on technique."—The Times.

Those of a more cantabile character are to be used as Solfeggi, the others are to be sung as Vocalises. In this Second Edition the accompaniments have been simplified.
